

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Cl. No. O:2J64:11 F5

Date of release for loan

Ac. No. 13272

This book should be returned on or before the date last stamped below. An overdue charge of one anna will be charged for each day the book is kept overtime.

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE
GENERAL EDITOR: W. J. CRAIG
1899-1906 : R. H. CASE, 1909

THE LIFE AND DEATH
OF
KING JOHN

THE WORKS
OF SHAKESPEARE

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF
KING JOHN

EDITED BY IVOR B. JOHN

METHUEN AND CO. LTD.
36 ESSEX STREET: STRAND LONDON

Second Edition

First Published . . . March 1907
Second Edition . . . 1925

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN

INTRODUCTION

THE reign of King John seems to have had considerable attraction for English dramatic writers. Some time before 1563, and probably not earlier than 1548, John Bale, Bishop of Ossory (b. 1495, d. 1563), had seized upon the subject as a weapon with which to attack the Papists. While still preserving the form and methods of the Morality play, the zealous bishop introduced into his Kynge Johan a certain amount of the historical element; for we find King John represented as the champion of Protestantism endeavouring to aid "Ynglond" in shaking off the chains of Papacy. For this he is excommunicated and the country is laid under an interdict, while invasion is threatened by the French, Spaniards and Northmen in aid of the Papal cause. To save his country from these accumulated horrors John submits to the Pope, but is poisoned by "Dyssymulacyon," otherwise "Simon of Swinsett," and dies a Protestant martyr.

With the exception of the King the characters of this play are little better than the personified abstractions of the Morality, who occupy their time in religious and political discussions while the action is at a standstill. Dramatic propriety of any kind is entirely wanting throughout.

Though ineffably tedious to read at the present day, this production is interesting from at least two points of view. In the first place it is a point of fusion between the Morality and the Historical play. In the second place it is very kind to the memory of "Johan" and exalts him into a hero, saint and martyr:—

This noble Kyng Johan, as a faythfull Moyses
Withstode proude Pharo for hys pore Israel. (lines 1106-7).

He takes part with "Englandes ryghtfull herytage"—for Bale carefully avoids any mention of Arthur—and is made to declare that his enemies have ever hated him "for doynge justice" (line 2125). The panegyric pronounced by "Veryte" best explains the author's attitude towards his "hero."

I assure ye, fryndes, lete men wryte what they wyll,
Kyng Johan was a man both valiaunt and godlye
What though Polydorus reporteth hym very yll
At the suggesyons of the malicyouse clergie,
Thynke you a Romane with the Romans can not lye?
Yes; therfore, Leylonde, out of thy slumbre awake,
And wytnesse a trewthe for thyne owne contrayes sake,¹

For his valiauntnesse many excellent writers make,
As Sigebertus, Vincentius, and also Naclerus; Geraldus and Mathu Parys with hys noble vertues take;
Yea, Paulus Phrigio, Johan Major, and Hector Boethius, Nothyng is allowed in hys lyfe of Polydorus,
Which discommendeth hys ponyshmentes for trayterye,
Advauncynge very sore hygh treason in the clergie.

Of hys godlynnesse thus muche report wyll I:
Gracyouse provysyon for sore, sycke, halte and lame
He made in hys tyme, both in toun and cytie,
Grauntynge great lyberties, for mayntenance of the same,
By markettes and fayers in places of notable name;

¹Note the "liaison" between the last rhyme of one stanza and the first rhyme of the next.

Great monymentes are in Yppeswych, Donwych, and Berye, Whych noteth hym to be a man of notable mercye;

The cytie of London, through his mere graunt and premye,
Was first privylyged to have both mayor and shrive,
Where before hys tyme it had but baylyves onlye;
In hys dayes the Brydge, the cytizens ded contrive,
Though he now be dead, hys noble actes are alyve.
His zeale is declared, as towchinge Christes religyon,
In that he exyled the Jewes out of thys regyon.

The good bishop's idea of John is as faulty as his idea of poetry and verse; his bias is due chiefly to his hatred of Catholicism which appears continually in such passages as—

K. ȝ. . . . thou menynt the Pope.

Yngland. I mean none other but hym, God geve hym a rope!
(Kynge Johan, i. 75.)

Kynge Johan lay in manuscript until printed by Collier for the Camden Society in 1838. If acted at all, it seems to have left no trace behind, for in 1591 there was "Imprinted at London for Sampson Clarke, to be solde at his shop, on the backe-side of the Royall Exchange," a play entitled The Troublesome Raigne of John King of England, with the discoverie of King Richard Cordelions Base Sonne (vulgarly named, The Bastard Fawconbridge): also the death of King John at Swinstead Abbey. As it was (sundry times) publikely acted by the Queenes Majesties Players, in the honourable citie of London; and in this play the influence of Kynge Johan is nowhere visible. The Troublesome Raigne was divided into two parts, the second being entitled The Second part of the troublesome Raigne of King John, conteining the death of Arthur

Plantaginet, the landing of Lewes, and the poysoning of King John at Swinstead Abbey, and it was probably written about 1589; but this is only conjecture, for we have no definite evidence on the point. Another edition, "Imprinted by Valentine Sims for John Helme," appeared in 1611, claiming to have been "written by W. Sh.," while a third edition of 1622 shamelessly asserts itself to have been "written by W. Shakespeare."

No one who compares the Troublesome Raigne with King John can for a moment entertain the idea that the former is a "first draft" of the latter.¹ If any argument of disproof were needed it would be sufficient to point out, as Mr. Rose has done, that no writer could possibly recast his own work in such a manner as to remodel every line but four. The explanation of the claim on the title-pages of the later editions of the Troublesome Raigne is quite simple; it was a deliberate attempt to make the public believe that the play for sale was the King John of Shakespeare, of which no Quarto seems to have appeared. King John had been performed before 1598 (vide infra), and so a wily publisher might easily gull the public in 1611 and 1622 into the belief that the Troublesome Raigne was the Shakespearian play.

Tieck clung to the belief that Shakespeare wrote the Troublesome Raigne, maintaining not only that every line of it bears the impress of Shakespeare's hand but that it is superior to King John! Pope says that it was written

¹ Since the above was written Prof. Courthope's volume dealing with King John has appeared, in which the Troublesome Raigne is given to Shakespeare. I still fail to see that there is the slightest justification for this.

"by W. Shakespeare and W. Rowley," and Farmer, who believes Rowley to have been the author, thinks that there must have been a tradition to that effect in Pope's time. Malone attributed the earlier play to Peele or Greene, while Fleay sees in it the joint work of Peele, Greene, and Lodge.

Marlowe's name has also been suggested, but the character of the play as a whole does not encourage belief in Marlowe's authorship. We may say, however, that no one but an admirer or pupil of Marlowe's could have produced Faulconbridge's soliloquy:—

What winde of honour blowes this furie forth?
 Or whence proecde (sic procede) these fumes of Majestie?
 Me thinkes I heare a hollow Eccho sound,
 That Philip is the Sonne unto a King:
 The whistling leaves upon the trembling trees,
 Whistle in consort I am Richard's Sonne:—
 The bubling murmur of the water's fall,
 Records Phillipus Regius filius:
 • Birds in their flight make musicke with their wings,
 Filling the ayre with glorie of my birth;
 Birds, bubbles, leaves, and mountains, Eccho, all
 Ring in mine eares, that I am Richard's Sonne.

(Troublesome Raigne, lines 263-274.)

The address to the Gentlemen Readers of the Play bears out this supposition, for they are addressed as—

You that with friendly grace of smoothed brow
 Have entertained the Scythian Tamburlaine.

But, in fine, we can only guess at the authorship of the Troublesome Raigne, and there is little to guide or check our guesses.

The early play has, of course, to bear comparison with Shakespeare's recast of it, and therefore appears at a great disadvantage. But, taken on its merits, it is by no means an utterly poor piece of work. In structure and in its sequence of events it fully satisfied Shakespeare; for the differences between the two versions in these respects are few and comparatively unimportant.

The Troublesome Raigne is 3081 lines in length. King John has 2715 lines; therefore, on the whole, Shakespeare has shortened his original. When we compare the first and second parts of the Troublesome Raigne with the corresponding parts of King John, we find that the 1822 lines of the first part of the Troublesome Raigne have been expanded by Shakespeare into 1987 in King John, while the 1259 of the Troublesome Raigne, Part II., have been compressed into 728 in King John. A glance at the dramatic content of each part reveals at once the reason for this difference of treatment. Part I. of the Raigne contains much more of the action than Part II. It ends with Hubert's setting out to inform the nobles that Arthur still lives, leaving little more than the deaths of Arthur and John to be dealt with in the second part. Therefore what Shakespeare did was to expand the more vigorous Part I., and to take the drag off the more slow-moving Part II.

The further and slighter alterations worth notice are as follows: The mother is not present during the scene where Faulconbridge proudly claims illegitimacy, and a little later Shakespeare adds a certain James Gurney to the dramatis personæ, a supernumerary of absolutely no importance.¹

¹ See Coleridge's curious note on this point, Table Talk, 12th March, 1827. "For an instance of Shakespeare's power in minimis, I generally

King John makes no mention of the Bastard's hope of winning Blanch for himself. In the Raigne he says (line 825): "Slave as I was, I thought to have moovde the match"; and this explains his hatred of the Dauphin.

The incidents of the quarrel between the Bastard and Lymoges-Austria are altered. In the Raigne Faulconbridge chases the Duke and makes him drop the lion's skin as early as the first battle between the English and French; later, the two quarrel before John, and Lymoges-Austria refuses to fight with Faulconbridge, his social inferior. John thereupon makes the Bastard Duke of Normandy, but Lymoges-Austria still will not fight. The death of the latter takes place under the same circumstances in both plays.

The capture and rescue of Elinor is part of the action in the Raigne, while Shakespeare merely narrates it in seven lines.

The scene in the Raigne in which Faulconbridge is shown at work ransacking the monastery and convent is completely omitted from King John. It is out of keeping even with the cruder style of the earlier play, where it seems to be inserted as a vulgar interlude, written in abominable doggerel. Still more would it have been out of keeping with Shakespeare's whole treatment of the play.

The "five moons" alluded to in King John are actually staged in the Raigne—(how this was managed we dare not guess!)—and the scenes concerned with the coronation and with Peter of Pomfret have been taken to pieces and reset.

quote James Gurney's character in King John. How individual and comical he is with the four words allowed to his dramatic life! And pray look at Skelton's Richard Sparrow also ! '

In the Raigne Faulconbridge is absent when the body of Arthur is found by the nobles and they accuse Hubert of the murder.

In the last Act the earlier dramatist stages the poisoning of the King, while Shakespeare brings the King on after he has taken the poison.

Thus we see that, so far as structure goes, Shakespeare practically took over the old play as it stood. The earlier dramatist took his material from Holinshed's Chronicles, handled it to suit his own purposes, and cared not a jot for fidelity to his original. It is a far cry, therefore, from King John and the Troublesome Raigne to the actual events of the reign of the historical King John, for Holinshed's Chronicles themselves are not a well of English history undefiled.

The play opens soon after the accession of John in 1199 and ends with his death in 1216. For Chatillon's embassy there is no historical warrant, nor could Philip of France have demanded Anjou, Maine, and Touraine; for, says Holinshed, "by generall consent of the nobles and peeres of the countries of Anjou, Maine and Touraine, Arthur was received as the liege and sovereigne lord of the same countries."

The writer of the Troublesome Raigne, who, as we have shown, made much more of the matter than Shakespeare did, probably obtained the idea of John's rifling the abbeys from a note in Holinshed sub anno 1210, where we are told that John on returning from an expedition to Ireland "constreined" the Cistercians to pay 40,000 pounds of silver notwithstanding "all their privileges to the contrary.

The cause that mooved the King to deal so hardlie with them was, for that they refused to helpe him with monie, when before his last going over into Normandie, he demanded it of them towards the paiment of the thirtie thousand pounds which he had covenanted to pay the French king."

The doings of Philip Faulconbridge have been compounded of materials derived from several sources. Holinshed mentions "Philip, bastard sonne to King Richard to whom his father had given the castell and honor of Coinacke," who "Killed the vicount of Limoges, in revenge of his father's death, who was slaine (as yee have heard) in besieging the castell of Chalus Cheverell." The "discovery of the base sonne" seems to be an adaptation of what Halle has to say about the conduct of Dunois, the Bastard of Orleans. His father "the lord of Cauni" and his mother being dead, Dunois, at eight years of age proudly claimed to be the illegitimate son of the Duke of Orleans, when the next-of-kin of Cauni claimed the inheritance. Stow has a somewhat similar story, in which Morgan, Provost of Beverley, would have been made Bishop had he not preferred to style himself the bastard son of King Henry, rather than the lawful issue of "one Radulph Bloeth."

The interview between John and Philip, spoken of in Act II., took place on 16th August, 1199; "on the morrow after the feast of the Assumption of our ladie." Blanch of Castile was not present at this meeting, nor was her betrothal mentioned. The match was "clapped up" at the next meeting of the Kings, Blanch still being absent. "Finallie, upon the Ascension day in this second yeare of his reigne, they came eftsoones to a communication betwixt the townes of Vernon and Lisle Dandelie; where finallie they concluded an agreement, with a marriage to be had betwixt Lewes the sonne of King Philip, and the ladie Blanch, daughter to Alfonso King of Castile the 8 of that name, and neece to K. John by his sister Elianor. In consideration whereof, King John, besides the summe of thirtie thousand markes in silver, as in respect of dowrie assigned to his said neece, resigned his title to the citie of Eureux, and also unto all those townes which the French King had by warre taken from him, the citie of Angiers onelie excepted, which citie he received againe by covenants of the same agreement. . . . The King of England likewise did homage unto the French King for Britaine, and againe (as after you shall heare) received homage for the same countrie, and for the countie of Richmont, of his nephue Arthur."

The first part of Act III. Scene i. pursues the thread of incident in historical order until we come to the entry of Pandulph, who was not sent to England by the Pope until 1211, when the country was still lying under the interdict of 1208. The quarrel between John and the Pope had arisen soon after 1205 when Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, died, and John had refused to allow Stephen Langton, the Pope's nominee, "to injoy the rule of the bishopricke and dioces of Canturburie". It was not until after the failure of the legates to intimidate John that Innocent absolved his subjects from their allegiance, and declared a kind of Crusade against him. This brings us to 1212.

In Scene ii. of the same Act we find Faulconbridge gloating over the payment of his score against Lymoges-Austria. Holinshed (see p. xv. ante) mentions the killing in 1199. The writer of the Troublesome Raigne has identified the Duke of Austria who imprisoned Richard Cœur-de-Lion in 1193 with Vidomar, Viscount of Limoges. "Brave Austria, cause of Cordelions death" (Troublesome Raigne, i. 446) says the French King; and in a stage-direction the Bastard "chaseth Lymoges the Austrich Duke."

Then follows the capture of Arthur by John, which brings us back to 1202, when Arthur was taken at Mirabeau, to be imprisoned first at Falaise and afterwards at Rouen. The "assailing" of Elinor in her tent is founded on the chronicler's description of her being hard beset at Mirabeau previous to the turn of fortune which led to Arthur's capture.

Angiers was taken by John in 1206—"comming to the Citie of Angiers, [he] appointed certeine bands of his footmen, and all his light horssemen to compasse the towne about, whilest he, with the residue of the footmen, and all the men of armes, did go to assault the gates. Which enterprise with fire and sword he so manfullie executed, that the gates being in a moment broken open, the citie was entered and delivered to the soldiers for a preie. So that of the citizens some were taken, some killed, and the wals of the citie beaten flat to the ground." It had previously been taken by the Queen-mother in 1199.

In the first scene of Act IV. we are again with Arthur, and the method of the playwrights in dealing with the actual facts about the prince may be best understood by comparing the words of the chroniclers with the plays. "It is said that King John caused his nephue Arthur to be brought before him at Falais, and there went about to persuade him all that he could to forsake his freendship and aliance with the French king, and to leane and stick to him, being his naturall uncle. But Arthur, like one that wanted good counsell, and abounding too much in his owne wilfull opinion, made a presumptuous answer; not onelie denieing so to doo, but also commanding King John to restore unto him the realme of England, with all those other lands and possessions which King Richard had in his hand at the houre of his death. For, sith the same appertained to him by right of inheritance, he assured him, except restitution were made the sooner, he should not long continue quiet. King John being sore mooved with such words, thus uttered by his nephue, appointed (as before is said) that he should be straitlie kept in prison, as first in Falais, and after at Roan within the new castell there. Thus by means of this good successe, the countries of Poictou, Touraine, and Anjou were recovered.

"Shortlie after, King John, comming over into England, caused himselfe to be crowned againe at Canturburie by the hands of Hubert the archbishop there, on the fourteenth day of Aprill, and then went backe againe into Normandie, where, immediatlie upon his arivall, a rumour was spread through all France, of the death of his nephue Arthur. True it is that great suit was made to have Arthur set at libertie, as well by the French king, as by William de Riches a valiant baron of Poictou, and diverse other noble men of the Britains, who when they could not prevaile in their suit, they banded themselves together and, joining in confederacy with Robert, earle of Alanson, the vicount Beamont, William de Fulgiers, and other, they began to levie sharpe wars against King John in diverse places, insomuch (as it was thought) that, so long as Arthur lived, there would be no quiet in those parts; whereupon it was reported that King John, through persuasion of his counsellors, appointed certeine persons to go unto Falais, where Arthur was kept in prison, under the charge of Hubert de Burgh, and there to put out the young gentlemen eies.

“But through such resistance as he made against one of the tormentors that came to execute the kings commandement (for the other rather forsook their prince and countrie, than they would consent to obeie the king's authoritie heerein) and such lamentable words as he uttered, Hubert de Burgh did preserve him from that injurie; not doubting but rather to have thanks than displeasure at the kings hands, for delivering him of such infamie as would have redounded unto his highnesse, if the young gentleman had been so cruellie dealt withall. For he considered, that King John had resolved upon this point onelie in his heat and furie (which moveth men to undertake many an inconvenient enterprise, unbeseeeming the person of a common man, much more reprochfull to a prince, all men in that mood being meere foolish and furious and prone to accomplish the perverse conceits of their ill possessed heart; . . .) and that afterwards, upon better advisement, he would both repente himselfe so to have commanded, and give them small thanke that should see it put into execution. Howbeit, to satisfie his mind for the time, and to staie the rage of the Britains, he caused it to be bruted abroad through the countrie, that the kings commandement was fulfilled; and that Arthur also through sorrow and greefe was departed out of this life. For the space of fifteen daies this rumour incessantlie ran through both the realmes of England and France, and there was ringing for him through towns and villages, as it had beene for his funerals." This happened in 1202, Arthur being then fifteen years of age. From this point onward the writer of the Troublesome Raigne "wildly walks" from the path of historical accuracy, and, of course, Shakespeare follows him. A messenger enters while we are still dealing with the events of 1202, to announce the landing of the French, which did not actually take place until 1216. At the same time the apparently recent deaths of Elinor and Constance are announced; Elinor, however, died in 1204, while Constance died three years (not "three days") before in 1201. With Peter of Pomfret we are in 1212. Concerning Peter, Holinshed has a good deal to say, the most important things for our purpose being as follows: "This Peter, about the first of Januarie last past, had told the king that, at the feast of the Ascension, it should come to passe, that he should be cast out of his kingdome. And (whether, to the intent that his words should be the better beleaved, or whether upon too much trust of his owne cunning) he offered himself to suffer death for it, if his prophesie proved not true. Heere-upon being committed to the Castle of Corf, when the day by him prefixed came, without any other notable damage unto king John, he was, by the king's commandement, drawn from the said castell unto the towne of Warham, and there hanged, together with his sonne. The people much blamed king John for this extreame dealing, bicause that the heremit was supposed to be a man of great virtue, and his sonne nothing guiltie of the offense committed by his father (if any were) against the king. Moreover, some thought that he had much wrong to die, bicause the matter fell out even as he had prophesied; for, the day before the Ascension day, king John had resigned the superioritie of his kingdome (as they tooke the matter) unto the pope, and had doone to him homage, so that he was no absolute King indeed, as authors affirm. One cause, and that not the least which mooved king John the sooner to agree with the pope, rose through the words of the said heremit, that did put such a feare of some great mishap in his hart, which would grow through the disloialtie of his people, that it made him yeeld the sooner."

The "five moons" are soberly recorded in Holinshed as having appeared in 1200. "About the moneth of December, there were, seene in the province of Yorke five moones, one in the east, the second in the west, the third in the north, the fourth in the south, and the fift as it were set in the middest of the other; having manie stars about it, and went five or six times incompassing the other, as it were the space of one houre, and shortlie after vanished awaie."

With Arthur's death we are again carried forward to 1203. After explaining how the "Britains" were angered still more upon hearing rumours of Arthur's death, and how the fact that he was still living was then made known, Holinshed goes on to say: "But now touching the maner in verie deed of the end of this Arthur, writers make sundrie reports. Nevertheless certeine it is, that, in the yeare next insuing, he was remooved from Falais unto the castell or tower of Rouen, out of the which there was not any that would confesse that ever he saw him go alive. Some have written, that, as he assaied to have escaped out of prison, and proving to clime over the wals of the castell, he fell into the river of Saine, and so was drowned. Other write, that through verie greefe and languor he pined awaie, and died of naturall sicknesse. But some affirme, that King John secretlie caused him to be murthered and made awaie, so as it is not throughlie agreed upon, in what sort he finished his daies; but verelie king John was had in great suspicion, whether worthilie or not, the lord knoweth."

Act v. opens with John's submission to Pandulph, which took place on 22nd May, the vigil of Ascension Day, 1213. The play, however, treats it as Ascension Day. Shakespeare makes the handing over of the crown a brief formality; but in the Raigne a long scene is inserted between the surrender of the crown and its redelivery to John. During this time Faulconbridge has gone to and returned from Edmundsbury, where the English nobles have assembled to meet Lewis. Holinshed tells us that "Pandulph, keeping the crown with him for the space of five daies in token of possession thereof, at length (as the popes vicar) gave it him againe."

The continual references to the French in England transport us to the year 1216, while the "cloked pilgrimage" of the barons who "assembled themselves together at the abbeie of Burie (under colour of going thither to do their devotions to the bodie of S. Edmund which laie there shrined) where they uttered their complaint of the kings tyrannicall manners."

This really was the first step towards the attainment of the Great Charter, and had little to do with the motives ascribed to the barons in the plays; for ". . . being thus assembled in the queere of the Church of S. Edmund, they received a solemn oath upon the altar there, that, if the King would not grant to them the same liberties, with others which he of his owne accord had promised to confirm to them, they would from thencefoorth make warre upon him, till they had obtained their purpose, and inforced him to grant, not onelie to all these their petitions, but also yeeld to the confirmation of them under his seale, for ever to remaine most stedfast and inviolable."

The invasion of England by Philip had been really staved off by Pandulph in 1213; the French King, however, having prepared for war was resolved to have it, and so attacked Ferrand, Count of Flanders, an ally of John's. Ferrand's appeal for help brought on a struggle which was ended by Philip's defeat of the English, Germans and Flemings at Bouvines on 27th July, 1214. An attempt to recover Poitou and Brittany further weakened the English King at home, and the barons seized the opportunity to make head against him at St. Edmundsbury, as we have seen.

The account of the success of the French in Kent is historically correct. So is the account of Lewis's duplicity towards his English helpers, and of its exposure by Melun.

The fight in Scene iii. has no historical warrant unless it refers to the battle of Lincoln in 1217, seven months after John's death. The wrecked "supply" can only be the reinforcements sent by Philip three months after the battle of Lincoln. These were destroyed in a naval fight by Hubert de Burgh, the stout defender of Dover Castle.

For the last scenes, chiefly dealing with the death of John, the dramatists have used the more picturesque accounts. Holinshed says "the king hasted forward till he came to Wellestreme sands, where passing the washes he lost a great part of his armie, with horsses and cariages; so that it was judged to be a punishment appointed by God, that the spoile, which had beene gotten and taken out of churches, abbeies, and other religious houses, should perish, and be lost by such means together with the spoilers. Yet the king himself, and a few other, escaped the violence of the waters, by following a good guide. But, as some have written, he tooke such greefe for the losse susteined at this passage, that immediatlie thereupon he fell into an ague; the force and heat whereof, together with his immoderate feeding on rawe peaches, and drinking of new sider, so increased his sicknesse, that he was not able to ride, but was faine to be carried in a litter presentlie made of twigs, with a couch of strawe under him, without any bed or pillow, thinking to have gone to Lincolne; but the disease still so raged and grew upon him, that he was inforced to staie one night at the castell of Laford, and, on the next day with great paine, caused himselfe to be caried unto Newarke, where, in the castell, through anguish of mind, rather than through force of sickness, he departed this life before the nineteenth day of October, in the yeare of his age fifty and one, and after he had reigned seaventeene yeares, six moneths, and seaven and twentie daies.

“There be which have written, that, after he had lost his armie, he came to the abbeie of Swineshead in Lincolneshire, and, there understanding the cheapenesse and plentie of corne, shewed himselfe greatlie displeased therewith, as he that for the hatred which he bare to the English people, that had so traitorouslie revolted from him unto his adversarie Lewes, wished all miserie to light upon them; and thereupon said in his anger, that he would cause all kind of graine to be at a farre higher price, yer manie daies should passe. Whereupon a moonke, that heard him speake such words, being mooved with zeale for the oppression of his countrie, gave the King poison in a cup of ale, wherof he first took the assaie, to cause the King not to suspect the matter, and so they both died in manner at one time.”

The time supposed to be taken up by the play of King John is in all not more than about four months. Mr. Daniel has done the necessary analysis once and for all, and his successors borrow his tables, as I do here.

Day 1. Act I. sc. i.

An interval. Return of the French ambassador, and arrival of John in France.

Day 2. Act II. sc. i.

„ Act III. sc. i.

„ Act III. sc. ii. and iii.

An interval.

Day 3. Act III. sc. iv. (Some time after the battle, since the French know that John has fortified the places he has won and has returned to England: from whence they also have news that the Bastard is ransacking the church.)

An interval: (deaths of Constance, 28th March, and Elinor, 1st April).

Day 4. Act IV. sc. i.

„ Act IV. sc. ii. Hubert announces that “Arthur is deceased to-night” (= last night).

„ Act IV. sc. iii. “Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well”; i.e. at end of Act IV.
sc. i.

An interval.

Day 5. Act v. sc. i. The arrival of Ascension Day, the presence of Pandulph, the news of the Dauphin's success, demand an interval before this Act. On the other hand, the Bastard has only now returned from his mission to the nobles, and the King now hears first of Arthur's actual death. These facts would connect the scene closely with the preceding.

An interval—for Pandulph's return to the Dauphin, the Bastard's preparation for defence, and the march to St. Edmundsbury.

Day 6. Act v. sc. ii.

„ Act v. sc. iii.

„ Act v. sc. iv.

„ Act v. sc. v.

Day 7. Act v. sc. vi.

„ Act v. sc. vii.

An "interval" means at least a clear twenty-four hours, in one day.

As we have pointed out, the construction of the plot is entirely the work of the earlier unknown dramatist. We have catalogued the most important liberties he has taken with chronology and historical fact, and must now ask whether he was justified in so doing. He was more than justified; the alterations made were absolutely necessary in order to obtain sufficient dramatic concentration, for it needs no pointing out to see that the play would have been utterly impossible as a play if the writer had slavishly followed the chronicles. As it is, the identification of Lymoges with Austria, the presence of Blanch at the interview between the Kings, and the sudden "clapping up" of her marriage; and, above all, the close weaving together of the Papal interference, the death of Arthur, the baronial revolt as if brought about by Arthur's supposed murder, and the French invasion—all these are felt to be dramatic gains.

In his adaptation two small points escaped Shakespeare's notice : in the first place, as we have previously mentioned, he does not explain the reason why Faulconbridge should so hate the Dauphin ; and, secondly, the monk who poisons John does so without any apparent motive, for by this time the King has submitted to the Pope. In the Troublesome Raigne things are a little more explicit. Swinsted seems to have suffered from John's previous plunderings, and, in revenge, the monk poisons the King.

Shakespeare does not seem to have consulted the Chronicles at first hand. Mr. Moore-Smith has indicated some minor points which seem to argue for his having done so—the accusation of unchastity brought by Constance against Elinor, the death of Elinor on 1st April, the use of the word "supply" in the last Act, and John's desire to be buried at Worcester. Even granting that Shakespeare did go to the Chronicles, he made no independent use of them in any important detail.

There is no extant Quarto of King John, that is, it does not seem to have been published until it made its appearance in the First Folio of 1623. It is mentioned in Meres' Palladis Tamia, 1598, in the famous phrase "For tragedy : his [Shakespeare's] Richard II., Richard III., Henry IV., King John, Titus Andronicus, and his Romeo and Juliet." We have already seen that the first edition of the Troublesome Raigne was published in 1591, and a reference in King John (Act I. sc. i. l. 244) to the play of Soliman and Perseda published in 1592, completes the only definite evidence we have concerning the date of the play. Often following what we shall see to be the most flimsy evidence of the purely internal kind—that which sees in certain passages obscure allusions to contemporary events—different editors have placed the play in every year between 1592 and 1598. Malone, for instance, was in favour of 1596 for the following reasons: (1) Shakespeare's son Hamnet died in August, 1596, and the lamentations of Constance for her captive son are partly an expression of Shakespeare's own grief. (2) Chatillon's speech, Act II. sc. i., "a braver choice of dauntless spirits," etc., may refer to the fleet sent out against Spain in 1596. (3) The lines in Act III. sc. i. 176-9—

And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonised and worshipp'd as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life,

may refer to the Bull published against Elizabeth in 1596. Other reasons are given which are even less plausible than these, and we must admit that when one of the greatest Shakespearian scholars can, along these lines, only adduce such slender evidence as this, we must search in other directions for clues to the date of our play.

First of all, it is quite clear that we are dealing with "early Shakespeare." Apart from a certain want of definite continuity throughout the play—which in itself might very well be put down to the close following of the older version—we find the "clenches," the lengthy speeches, the antithetical answers, the absence of prose, and the more inelastic verse characteristic of Shakespeare's earlier manner. The minute analysis of this last point—verse—the formidable array of perhaps rather too mechanical "double-ending,"

"light-ending," and "broken-line" tests, together with the "rhyme-test," lead us to the same conclusion. Professor Herford in his Introduction to the Warwick edition of Richard II. thus tabulates the results of these tests:—

	1 H. VI.	2 and 3 H. VI.	R. III.	R. and J	K. J.	R. II.	1 H. IV.	2 H. IV.	H. V.
Rhyme test . . .	10.0	3.0	3.5	17.2	4.5	18.6	2.7	2.9	3.2
Double-ending test . . .	8.2	13.7	19.5	8.2	6.3	11.0	5.1	16.3	20.5
Light-ending test . . .	10.4	10.0	13.1	14.2	17.7	19.9	22.8	21.4	21.8
Broken-line test . . .	0.5	1.0	2.9	14.9	12.1	7.3	14.2	16.8	18.3

These percentages in the first two cases do not enlighten us much, but we notice that in the last two, which are generally supposed to be the more trustworthy, King John shares with Richard II. the middle place in the series, and on general grounds (following what we might call the "feeling" test) Richard II. and King John seem to be grouped together. Authorities unanimous in dating Richard II. about 1593-4 are now equally unanimous in dating John either immediately before or immediately after Richard; we have therefore to choose between a date nearer to 1593 and a date nearer to 1595. Nothing can guide us in our choice except a comparison of the plays in the hope of discovering signs of greater maturity in the treatment of one or the other. But even here we are handicapped; firstly, by the fact that Shakespeare deliberately chose to keep close to his "source" in so many respects, and therefore did not allow his own genius full play, and secondly, by the fact that, in any case, the plays were written within a very short time of one another. Comparison of the methods and characteristics of the two plays yields the following results: There is a greater consistency and unity in the treatment of Richard's character. He is, all through, the weak, sentimental poseur, whose weakness we pity, and whose poses we despise; but we sympathise with him in his misfortunes because they are brought about not by crime but by incompetence, not by deliberate malice but as a result of sentimental impotence. On the other hand, John is at one and the same time the swift and resolute warrior leaping fearlessly upon his enemy, the champion of his country against Papal aggression, and the vacillating coward far worse than the murderer of Arthur, toadying to Pandulph and detracting from our sympathy with his awful death by the childishness of his unkingly lamentations. John is neither the hero nor the villain of the piece but an unpleasant mixture of both.

Again, the characters in Richard appear to be drawn by a hand at once firmer and more subtle.

We get to know Bolingbroke gradually and surely as the play progresses, every action and almost every word add little by little to our conception of his character, and that conception is only completed with the last scene of the last Act. There is no parallel to this in King John. We know Faulconbridge as well at the end of the first scene as we do when we close the book. It may be said that every scene is a new revelation of John's character. Granting that, we still find that the revelation is not consistent, natural and inevitable as it is in the case of Bolingbroke. These arguments, and others of a similar kind that might be adduced, make for the later date of Richard.

As opposed to that view it may be held that the mixture of tragedy and comedy in the play brought about by Shakespeare's treatment of the character of the Bastard is a sign of more mature work; besides, the continual and fatiguing drop into rhyme in the earlier part of Richard and the uncalled-for puns and conceits in unwelcome places also seem to indicate that Richard was earlier than John. Again, if we examine more closely the table of tests just given, and compare only the figures relating to Richard and John, we find that the first and last are in favour of the earlier date of Richard while the other two are against it. The tests therefore are at least not against the earlier date of Richard II.

A comparison between two similar passages, King John, II. i. 23 et seq. and Richard II., II. i. 40 et seq., may give a slight hint as to their order. Shakespeare never goes back, and in such cases the more elaborate and fuller passage is always the later. In this case the Richard passage is far more fully developed than that in John; this seems therefore to make for the later date of Richard.

The definite truth, however, "by our best eyes cannot be censured," and we must therefore candidly date John with a hyphen, 1593-5.

.

We have dealt with the dry bones of the play as Shakespeare took them over from the Troublesome Raigne, but we have still to deal with the flesh and blood in which he clothed them.

INTRODUCTION

xxxiii

Once again it is the old story of genius, like the "glorious sun" playing

. . . the alchemist,
Turning with splendour of his precious eye
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold.

— It is true that the play has its defects. We have already partly mentioned the greatest of these,—it has no real "hero." (John ought to be the hero.' 'He is "cast" for it, but cannot play the part.' Faulconbridge, although prominent, is not quite prominent enough, and, as the provider of continual "comic relief," is not dignified enough. Arthur, in order that the pathos of his situation may be more fully developed—in the scene with Hubert it is absolutely essential that Arthur should be an innocent child—is kept too young, and dies too soon. This want of a commanding central figure gives a certain regrettable looseness of structure to the play. The minor faults of construction we have already noticed, and with them we are at the end of our fault-finding.

When we come to ask what are the strong points of the play, we do not know whether to admire most that breathing of life into the clay figures of the Raigne, which stirred into being men and women worthy to take their places in the front ranks of Shakespeare's wondrous array of human creations; or that exhibition of supreme mastery of all the detail of stage-craft to be found in every rejection, acceptance or alteration of the arrangement of the original. Probably the best way to appreciate these things would be to read both plays together, scene for scene and speech for speech; we can hardly illustrate them within the limits of an Introduction. But, apart from comparison, it is quite easy to recognise the touch of genius in the presentation of the character of that "hardy wild head, tough and venturous," as the Raigne calls him,—the Bastard; in the revelation of the depths of Constance's love and grief; in the pathetic and innocent pleadings of Arthur for his eyes; and, indeed, in the glib sophistry of Pandulph.

For the detailed stage history of the play the reader is referred to the Irving Shakespeare. We know nothing of it previous to 1736, when Cibber rehearsed an adaptation of it entitled Papal Tyranny under King John; but this failed to weather a storm of denunciation from opponents of any tampering with Shakespeare, and "King John in silence modestly expire(d)," as Pope took care to inform the world. But in 1745 the aged Cibber saw his play actually staged, he himself taking the part of Pandulph.

In 1737 Shakespeare's King John was produced by Rich at Covent Garden, and Walker's Faulconbridge was declared to have been a finer performance than that of his successors Garrick, Sheridan, Delane and Barry.

Between 1737 and 1846 the play was often revived. The Constance of Mrs. Cibber and Mrs. Siddons, the King John of Garrick, Macready and Charles Kean, and the Faulconbridge of Kemble being notable performances.

Mr. Tree's revival of the play at the Haymarket in 1899 aroused considerable interest, inasmuch as several alterations were made. The play was divided into three Acts instead of five, the new divisions being made with reference to Arthur—Act I. ended with his capture, Act II. with his death, Act III. with John's death as a consequence of Arthur's. Two tableaux were introduced, one of the battle before Angiers, and a second (which is very difficult to defend) of the signing of Magna Charta, before the last Act.

As to the Charter, it does seem strange to us, no doubt, that Shakespeare and his predecessor completely ignored it. But we must remember that in their day the importance of the Charter had not begun to be understood. In any case, its introduction into Mr. Tree's version on account of its historical and constitutional importance hardly seems justified when we remember that it has nothing whatever to do with the plot or development of the play. Some cleverly conceived and very effective minor "business" was also introduced, and the revival had a longer life than any other.

.
In preparing this edition I have availed myself freely of the labours of my predecessors, and of the works of the army of critics and editors of Shakespeariana, of which latter class the Shakespeare's Holinshed, of Mr. Boswell-Stone, stands as a splendid example.

As regards readings, the fact that there is no Quarto of King John makes the correction of corrupt passages a matter of pure conjecture, and, consequently, we have had made many "giddy, loose suggestions." In all cases I have endeavoured to be as conservative of the text as possible, and besides, I have had no hesitation in sitting firmly on the fence where explanations seem unsatisfactory or where probabilities seem evenly balanced ; very rarely indeed have I offered an independent suggestion, the chief instance being the reading of "fury-kindled" for "fiery-kindled" in II. i. 358. In one or two instances mentioned and noted passim, I have altered the punctuation.

Finally, I gratefully acknowledge valuable help from Professor Littledale and from the general editor of this series.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ*

KING JOHN.

PRINCE HENRY, son to the king.

ARTHUR, Duke of Bretagne, nephew to the king.

THE EARL OF PEMBROKE.

THE EARL OF ESSEX.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY.

THE LORD BIGOT.

HUBERT DE BURGH.

ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE, son to Sir Robert Faulconbridge.

PHILIP the Bastard, his half-brother.

JAMES GURNEY, servant to Lady Faulconbridge.

PETER of Pomfret, a prophet.

PHILIP, king of France.

LEWIS, the Dauphin.

LYMOGES, Duke of Austria.

CARDINAL PANDULPH, the Pope's legate.

MELUN, a French lord.

CHATILLON, ambassador from France to King John.

QUEEN ELINOR, mother to King John.

CONSTANCE, mother to Arthur.

BLANCH of Spain, niece to King John.

LADY FAULCONBRIDGE.

Lords, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriff, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE: Partly in England, and partly in France.

* The list of dramatis personæ does not appear in the Folios. It was first given by Rowe.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN

ACT I

SCENE I.—King John's Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, QUEEN ELINOR, PEMBROKE, ESSEX,
SALISBURY, and others, with CHATILLON.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of France

In my behaviour to the majesty,

The borrowed majesty, of England here.

Eli. A strange beginning: "borrowed majesty!" 5

K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf

Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son,

Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim with Chatillon] The Folios read "with the Chattyllion of France." Perhaps "Lord" had dropped out before "Chattyllion," or perhaps "Chatyllion" was taken to mean "Chatelain" or some similar title.

3. In my behaviour] Through my conduct as ambassador. Compare v. i. 50, 51: "i . . . yes, That borrow their behaviours from the great," and Faulconbridge's embassy to the French, v. ii. 128, 129: "Now hear our English king; For thus his royalty doth speak in me."

9. Arthur . . . claim] Pope needlessly omits most. Scan "Arthur Plantag'net, lays most lawful claim." Compare 3 Henry VI. i. i. 40: "Un-

To this fair island and the territories, 10

To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,

Desiring thee to lay aside the sword

Which sways usurpingly these several titles,

And put the same into young Arthur's hand,

Thy nephew and right royal sovereign. 15

K. John. What follows if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment: so answer France. 20

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,

The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;

For ere thou canst report I will be there, 25

18. enforce] inforce F 1.

less Plantag'net, Duke of York, be king"; and ibid. line 48: "I'll plant Plantag'net, root him up who dares." In many other cases, however, Shakespeare gives four syllables to Plantagenet.

10. island] One is here tempted to keep the older and more correct form "island" as printed in F 1. Compare Milton's Comus, line 50: "On Circe's island fell."

10. the territories] There is no other case of the use of "the territories" in this way by Shakespeare. One is tempted to suggest either "and the territories Of Ireland," or "her territories." In Troublesome Raigne, II. iii. (ed. 1591), we have "to England, Cornwall and Wales, and to their territories."

12. Desiring] Commanding. Compare modern English (to a child): "I desire you to come here."

17. The proud . . . war] The proud constraint of fierce and bloody war. There is no similar "control" in Troublesome Raigne; we find: "Till I resisted shock Contr of proud Angiers Kyd's Spanish Tragedy 139:—

"The trespass th in peace

Is now control
the war."

20. controlment: often uses, as here, before the cæsura, to alter the sense of "control."

21. Then take: compare Henry V. III. greet England with defiance."

The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:
 So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath
 And sullen presage of your own decay.
 An honourable conduct let him have:
 Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon. 30

[Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke]

Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said
 How that ambitious Constance would not cease
 Till she had kindled France and all the world,
 Upon the right and party of her son?
 This might have been prevented and made whole 35
 With very easy arguments of love,
 Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
 With fearful-bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession and our right for us.

Eli. Your strong possession much more than your right, 40
 Or else it must go wrong with you and me:
 So much my conscience whispers in your ear,
 Which none but heaven and you and I shall hear.

Enter a Sheriff.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy
 Come from the country to be judged by you, 45
 That e'er I heard: shall I produce the men?

29. An honourable conduct . . .
have] In Troublesome Raigne, i. i. 61 et seq. John says:—

"Pembroke, convey him safely to the sea,

But not in hast: for as we are advise

We mean to be in France as soone as he

Shakespeare does petty treachery to

29. conduct] safe

37. the manage of two kingdoms]
i.e. those who manage the two kingdoms, the powers, the authorities. Compare note on line 17 supra.
 Fleay wished to treat it as a plural noun, but if we take it in the more abstract sense this is unnecessary.

38. fearful-bloody] Mr. Craig suggests the hyphen—a typically Shakespearian compound.

Enter a Sheriff] The Troublesome Raigne, Part i., has the stage-

K. John. Let them approach.

Our abbeyes and our priories shall pay
This expedition's charge.

Enter ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE, and PHILIP his bastard brother.

What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman 50
Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge,
A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou? 55

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?

You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king;
That is well known; and, as I think, one father: 60
But for the certain knowledge of that truth
I put you o'er to heaven and to my mother:
Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

49. expedition's] expeditious F 1; Fleay keeps this reading. 54. Cœur-de-lion] Ff and Troublesome Raigne spell Richard's appellation Cordelion.

direction, "Enter the Shrive, and whispers the Earl of Sals. in the eare." Capell introduced this into Shakespeare's play, substituting "Essex" for "Salisbury." Some such device is necessary, unless we assume that Shakespeare wishes us to believe that Essex had previous knowledge of the Sheriff's business.

48, 49. Our abbeyes . . . charge] This pillaging of the Church plays a much larger part in the Trouble- some Raigne than in King John. In Bale's Kynge Johan John is always harping on the riches of the Church. See Introduction, p. vii. et seqq.

54. knighted . . . field] To be knighted in the field was an honour given only to the bravest fighters. See Gautier's La Chevalerie for instances (pp. 253, 254). Compare also Cymbeline, v. v. 20.

62. put you o'er to] refer you to.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother
And wound her honour with this diffidence. 65

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, a' pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year:
Heaven guard my mother's honour and my land! 70

K. John. A good blunt fellow. Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with bastardy:
But whether I be as true begot or no, 75
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But that I am as well begot, my liege,—
Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!—
Compare our faces and be judge yourself.
If old sir Robert did beget us both 80

75. whether] Ff 1-3 have where for whether according to the pronunciation.

64. rude man] = rûde-man. Compare "rudesby" in Taming of the Shrew, III. ii. 10, and Twelfth Night, IV. i. 55. Mr. Craig suggests reading "Out, out on thee, rude man! Dost shame thy mother!"

65. diffidence] obsolete sense of "mistrust." Compare King Lear, I. ii. 161: "heedless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts."

69. pound] The singular is often used for the plural by Shakespeare in these cases. Here it adds to the colloquialism of the Bastard's speech, who also uses the colloquial a' for he.

74. once] Delius would take "once" as equivalent to "once for all." Mr. Wright objects, for "slander'd" would then require alteration to "slanders." There seems no adequate reason for rejecting the obvious meaning of "once"—in time past. "Slander'd" does not here necessarily imply falseness of accusation as it does nowadays, but accusation merely.

74-78. But] Vaughan suggests that three initial "Buts" in five lines could not be due to Shakespeare. He would put line 76 in brackets, and read "Yet" for "But" in line 77.

78. Fair fall] Fair hap befall. Compare Richard III. I. iii. 282: "Now fair befall thee and thy noble house"; Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, III. 3: "Fair fall thy sweet face for it"; Burns' Lines to a Haggis: "Fair fa' thy honest sonsie face."

And were our father and this son like him,
 O old sir Robert, father, on my knee
 I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee!

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He hath a trick of Cœur-de-lion's face; 85
 The accent of his tongue affecteth him.
 Do you not read some tokens of my son
 In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts
 And finds them perfect Richard. Sirrah, speak, 90
 What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father.

84. lent] sent Hudson (Heath conj.). 92-94. father. . . . land: . . . year! father? . . . land, . . . year? Ff 1, 2; father, . . . land, . . . year? Ff 3, 4; father, . . . land; . . . year. Capell; father, . . . land? . . . year! Theobald.

85. He hath a trick] Vaughan would prefer to read "the trick." As it stands it means "He hath a copy of Cœur-de-lion's face"; "trick" being a heraldic term for a pen-and-ink copy of a coat-of-arms. "Tricked: sketched in outline with pen and ink" (Boutell's Heraldry, p. 84). Compare "Copy of the father, eye, nose, lip, The trick of's frown" (The Winter's Tale, II. iii. 100); "The trick of that voice I do well remember" (King Lear, IV. vi. 108), which seem to be less pertinent examples, where "trick" is used in the more modern sense of "peculiarity."

86. affecteth] resembleth. There is no other example of this use in Shakespeare.

88. large composition] big build. Compare 1 Henry VI. II. iii. 75: "You did mistake The outward composition of his body"; and Lyly's Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 293, line 6):

"disposition of the mind follows composition of the body."

92, 94. half-face] profile. For "half that face" (line 93) Theobald reads "that half-face"; Vaughan suggests "half a face," and another conjecture is "half the face." Theobald's reading seems to be the most rational. Half-faced groat: a groat with the sovereign's face in profile. Compare Boorde, Introduction to Knowledge (quoted in New Eng. Dict.): "They have half-face crowns." There seems to be at least a suggestion of contempt in the use of the term. Compare 2 Henry IV. III. ii. 283: "And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow . . . the foe-man may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife"; and Munday's Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntington (quoted in New Eng. Dict.): "You half-fac'd groat! You thick- (? thin-) cheek'd chittiface."

With half that face would he have all my land :

A half-faced groat five hundred pound a year !

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father lived, 95

Your brother did employ my father much,—

Bast. Well sir, by this you cannot get my land :

Your tale must be how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once dispatch'd him in an embassy

To Germany, there with the emperor 100

To treat of high affairs touching that time.

The advantage of his absence took the king

And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's ;

Where how he did prevail I shame to speak,

But truth is truth : large lengths of seas and shores 105

Between my father and my mother lay,

As I have heard my father speak himself,

When this same lusty gentleman was got.

Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd

His lands to me, and took it on his death 110

That this my mother's son was none of his ;

And if he were, he came into the world

Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.

Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,

My father's land, as was my father's will. 115

100. the emperor] Henry VI.

110. took it on his death] my father swore most solemnly. This phrase, often met with in Elizabethan literature, implies that the person swearing used the most solemn form of words known to him. Compare the modern phrase "May I die if . . ." Falstaff could use this formula without fear on one point only. See 1 Henry IV. v. iv. 154: "I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound on the thigh." Owing to the mention of "death-bed" in line 109, Steevens explains it as "entertained it as his fixed opinion when he was dying." Vachon takes it to mean "engaged to be responsible for it as for a vow made at the approach of death," which seems to be exactly what is intended here. "Oath" has been less suggested for "death"

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate ;
 Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him,
 And if she did play false, the fault was hers ;
 Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
 That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother, 120
 Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
 Had of your father claim'd this son for his ?
 In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
 This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world ;
 In sooth he might ; then, if he were my brother's, 125
 My brother might not claim him ; nor your father,
 Being none of his, refuse him : this concludes ;
 My mother's son did get your father's heir ;
 Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force 130
 To dispossess that child which is not his ?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
 Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
 And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land, 135
 Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,
 Lord of thy presence and no land beside ?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,

134. rather . . . Faulconbridge] rather,—be Capell ; be ? a Vaughan conj
 138. an if] The Folios read and if for an if continually.

119. lies on the hazards, etc.] is among the risks all husbands must run.

137. Lord of thy presence] "Continuing to possess precisely the same figure and face which you now have" (Vaughan). As Vaughan points out, "whether" proposes two alternatives—to be like the legitimate son and possess land, or to be reputed the son of Cœur-de-lion, keeping his present appearance, and having no land. The phrase will also bear the meaning of "Lord from thy very appearance," that is, "your mere appearance would tell people that you were nobly born." But compare II. i. 367 infra.

And I had his, sir Robert's his, like him ;
 And if my legs were two such riding-rods, 140
 My arms such eel-skins stuff'd, my face so thin
 That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose Lest men should say "Look, where three-farthings goes!"

And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
 Would I might never stir from off this place, 145
 I would give it every foot to have this face ;
 I would not be sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
 Bequeath thy land to him and follow me?

I am a soldier and now bound to France. 150

139. sir Robert's his] This is treated by Schmidt and Mr. Moore-Smith as a double genitive. It may be so explained, and be quite in keeping with the Bastard's colloquial roughness of speech. Vaughan would read "just Sir Robert's shape," or "just Sir Robert his." The meaning is obvious—"if my brother had my shape and I had his." Again, we may suppose the Bastard to be literally pointing the finger of scorn at his brother at the words "his, like him."

140. riding-rods] switches. Compare Cotgrave, "Houssine: a switch, . . . a riding rod of holly; an holly wand." Compare Two Angry Women (1597), ii. 53: "And if he giue her [a horse] but a nod, She thinks it is a riding rod."

141. eel-skins] Compare 2 Henry IV. iii. 351: "You might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eel skin."

143. three farthings] Pieces of this value were coined in Elizabeth's reign for the first and last time in the history of English coinage. As the smaller coins were of values closely approximating to one another, the odd and alternate pieces were distinguished by a rose or rosette behind the head of the queen. The three-farthings was so marked (see Hawkins, Silver Coins of England, 2nd ed., under "Elizabeth"), hence the point of the allusion in Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, iii. ii.:—

"He had a bastard, his own toward issue,
 Whipp'd and then cropp'd,
 For washing out the roses in three-farthings
 To make 'em pence."

144. And, to his shape, . . . land] And in addition to having his appearance were heir to all this land that is in question. The "this," which Vaughan would alter, with great probability, to "his," may be a colloquialism.

145. Would . . . stir] Compare The Merry Wives of Windsor, v. v. 199: "If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir."

147. I would not] The first Folio reads It would not, which Delius retains, believing that it refers to "face."

149. Nob] Diminutive of Robert, used contemptuously by the Bastard.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.

Your face hath got five hundred pound a year,

Yet sell your face for five pence and 'tis dear.

Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither. 155

Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege, so is my name begun;

Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st: 160

Kneel thou down Philip, but rise more great,

Arise sir Richard and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother by the mother's side, give me your hand:

My father gave me honour, yours gave land.

Now blessed be the hour, by night or day, 165

When I was got, sir Robert was away!

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!

I am thy grandam, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance but not by truth; what though?

Something about, a little from the right, 170

In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:

161. Kneel . . . great] The line is defective. Pope, rise up; Steevens, arise; Keightley, to rise.

169. truth] = honesty = honourable conduct.

169. what though?] what of that? what matters it? Common in Shakespeare. See As You Like It, III. iii. 51; Merry Wives of Windsor, I. i. 286; Henry V. II. i. 9.

170. Something about] Something indirect, not straightforward. Compare All's Well that Ends Well, I. iii. 194:—

"Go not about, my love hath in't a bond

Whereof the world takes note."

This speech consists of references to the Bastard's illegitimacy wrapped up in everyday phrases and proverbs.

171. o'er the hatch] over the lower half of a door which opened in two parts, like the door of most country smithies to-day. Compare Webster, Northward Ho, I. I: "Kindred that comes in o'er the hatch."

Who dares not stir by day must walk by night,

And have is have, however men do catch :

Near or far off, well won is still well shot,

And I am I, howe'er I was begot. 175

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge: now hast thou thy desire ;

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.

Come, madam, and come, Richard, we must speed

For France, for France, for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee! 180

For thou wast got i' the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but Bastard.

A foot of honour better than I was ;

But many a many foot of land the worse.

Well, now can I make any Joan a lady. 184

"Good den, sir Richard!"—"God-a-mercy, fellow!"—

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter ;

For new-made honour doth forget men's names ;

183. many a many] Hanmer reads "many, many a," and Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.), "many, ah! many a." The emendations are needless, for a many was often used where we use many a, e.g. Massinger's Virgin Martyr, ii. 2: "Honesty is some fiend, and frights him hence; A many courtiers love it not"; Edward III. iii. iii. 162 (Temple ed.): "As 'twere a many over-ridden jades"; ibid. iii. 4 (stage-direction); "Enter a many Frenchmen flying." This passage, like so many others, is quite in keeping with the Bastard's character and needs no emendation.

184. Joan] Used as a common noun. "A generic name for a female rustic" (New Eng. Dict.). It was a common peasant name. Compare Gosson's Schoole of Abuse (Arber's Reprints, No. iii. p. 35): "Every John and his Joan"; and Love's Labour's Lost, iii. i. 207: "Some men must love my lady and some Joan."

185. Good den] Good-evening, good-even, good-e'en, good-den, and sometimes "god-den," e.g. Henry V. iii. ii. 89: "God-den to your worship, good captain James."

185. God-a-mercy] This was the salutation of a superior to an inferior. This perhaps is most plainly seen in Arden of Feversham, where there are many examples.

187. For new-made honour, etc.] For new-made honour doth forget men's names; to remember them is to do them too much honour, and is too sociable for one who has suddenly been promoted to a high position. The Bastard then goes on to suppose himself seated at dinner with a tra-

'Tis too respective and too sociable
 For your conversion. Now your traveller,
 He and his toothpick at my worship's mess, 190
 And when my knightly stomach is sufficed,
 Why then I suck my teeth and catechize
 My picked man of countries: "My dear sir,"
 Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin,
 "I shall beseech you"—that is question now; 195
 And then comes answer like an Absey book:
 "O sir," says answer, "at your best command;
 At your employment; at your service, sir:"
 "No, sir," says question, "I, sweet sir, at yours:"
 And so, ere answer knows what question would, 200
 Saving in dialogue of compliment,
 And talking of the Alps and Apennines,
 The Pyrenean and the river Po,

203. Pyrenean] Perennean F 1; Pyrennean Ff 2, 3, 4; Pyrensans Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.).

velled man. Holt White, followed by Mr. Wright, believes "picked man of countries" to mean "travelled fop," while Steevens and others take "of countries" as equivalent to "about countries" and depending upon "catechize." The toothpick was a sign of travelled foppishness. The "mess" seems to have been a table laid for four, guests at a great dinner being arranged in fours (see Dyce-Littledale). Malone takes "at my worship's mess" to mean "At that part of the table where I, as a knight, shall be placed," that is, above the salt (ibid.). The "Absey book" was the A B C book or primer, which often included the Catechism.

193. picked] finikin. Compare Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 277, line 27). "then they used to woo in plain terms, now in piked sentences."

201. Saving] Theobald, after a conjecture of Warburton's, reads Serving. Vaughan, in Notes and Queries (1882) suggests Sharing or Halving or Salving; while in his 1886 edition he says: "The line should certainly run: 'Salving in dialogue of compliment'"; the idea being that the two speakers were merely soothing one another by bandying compliments. If we take the line as it stands—"Before the answering man knows what the questioner would, except in so far as customary complimentary retorts are concerned"—we leave "And so" in the air; but having regard to the looseness of structure of the whole speech, this may not be impossible. We may shuffle out of the difficulty by suspecting a dropped line.

It draws toward supper in conclusion so.
 But this is worshipful society, 205
 And fits the mounting spirit like myself;
 For he is but a bastard to the time
 That doth not smack of observation;
 And so am I, whether I smack or no;
 And not alone in habit and device, 210
 Exterior form, outward accoutrement,
 But from the inward motion to deliver
 Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:
 Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
 Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn; 215
 For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.
 But who comes in such haste in riding-robes?
 What woman-post is this? hath she no husband
 That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter LADY FAULCONBRIDGE and JAMES GURNEY. 220

O me! it is my mother. How now, good lady? 220
 What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he,
 That holds in chase mine honour up and down?

204. toward] Ff 1, 2; towards Ff 3, 4. 208, 209. smack . . . smack] Theobald's emendation; smoake . . . smacke Ff 1, 2; smoak . . . smack Ff 3, 4; smack . . . smoak Pope. 220. it is] Pope; 'tis Ff.

207. For he is but a bastard, etc.] For he is but a bastard to this age who is not a little obsequious. But I am a bastard in any case, not in appearance alone but inwardly also, for I will not use flattery. I shall learn it though; not to deceive others but to avoid being deceived, for as I rise flattery will be strewn before me like flowers before one making a progress.

208. observation] the observing of the wishes of others, i.e. obsequiousness.

212. inward motion] "movements" of the mind. Compare Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 236, line 25): "carried the motion of his mind in his manners."

213. sweet . . . tooth] Compare Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 34, line 27): "followed unbridled affection, most pleasant for his tooth."

Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert's son?

Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man? 225

Is it sir Robert's son that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy,

Sir Robert's son: why scorn'st thou at sir Robert?

He is sir Robert's son, and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile? 230

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip! sparrow: James,

There's toys abroad: anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.]

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son:

Sir Robert might have eat his part in me

232. toys] noise Gould conj.

225. Colbrand the giant] A popular giant and "bug" in Elizabethan times. Compare Ralph Roister Doister, I. ii. 123: "Who is this? Great Goliath, Sampson or Colbrand"; and Henry VIII. v. iv. 22: "I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand To mow 'em down before me." He was one of the mightiest giants overthrown by Guy of Warwick. He had been brought by the Danes as their champion from Africa, and was overthrown by Guy before King Athelstan at Winchester. (See the fifteenth century version of Guy of Warwick, ed. Zupitza, Early English Text Society, 1876.)

231. Philip! sparrow] The sparrow from its chirp was often called Philip or Phip. We may remember Skelton's Boke of Phyllip Sparowe; and Sidney's Astrophel and Stella (ed. Grosart, i. 109, 110) (To a Sparrow): "Good brother Philip" and "Leave that Syr Phip"; and "ad solam dominam usque pipiabat" (Lesbia's Sparrow, Catullus). The Bastard is now no longer Philip Faulconbridge but Sir Richard Plantagenet, and is playfully rebuking Gurney for calling him by his old name, at the same time raising his curiosity which he promises to satisfy later. Theobald's (Warburton's) and Grey's readings—Philip,—spare me, and Philip—spare oh!—are amusing.

232. toys] Compare Edward III. iv. iii. 83: "But all are frivolous fancies, toys and dreams." As Steevens says, Shakespeare uses the word with great latitude. Here it seems to mean rumours. Compare The Winter's Tale, iii. iii. 39: "Dreams are toys"; and Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. i. 3: "I never may believe These antique fables nor these fairy toys." The broad meaning, "imaginary things," would cover all these uses.

234, 235. eat . . . fast] Proverbial. Compare Heywood's Proverbs (1564), ed. Sharman (1874): "He may his part on good Fridaie eate, And fast never the wurs, for ought he shall geate."

Upon Good-Friday and ne'er broke his fast : 235
 Sir Robert could do well : marry, to confess,
 Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it :
 We know his handiwork : therefore, good mother,
 To whom am I beholding for these limbs?
 Sir Robert never help to make this leg. 240

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
 That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour?
 What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother, Basilisco-like.
 What! I am dubb'd! I have it on my shoulder. 245
 But, mother, I am not sir Robert's son;
 I have disclaim'd sir Robert and my land;
 Legitimation, name and all is gone:
 Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
 Some proper man, I hope : who was it, mother? 250

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

236, 237. Sir Robert . . . do it] Vaughan suggests a plausible alteration in the punctuation:—

"Sir Robert could do well,
 (Marry, to confess,) Could he get me. Sir Robert could not do it."

The meaning is plain and is preferable to that of the generally accepted reading, where "Sir Robert could do well" seems meaningless when contrasted with the next line, while "marry, to confess," has to be treated as a mere cliché. Keightley reads "to confess the truth," and Dyce, following the Collier MS., reads "could not get me," neither of which is satisfactory. The Folios read "Could get me Sir" without a stop after "me." The reading in the text is Pope's.

243. untoward] bad - mannered.

Compare The Taming of the Shrew, iv. v. 79 : "If she be froward, Then thou hast taught Hortensio to be untoward."

244. Basilisco-like] Theobald first pointed out the allusion to Kyd's Soliman and Perseda:—

"Bas. I, the aforesaid Basilisco,— Knight, good fellow, Knight,
 Knight,—
Pist. Knave, good fellow, Knave, Knave."

A large early cannon was called a basilisco or basilisk.

247, 248. Robert . . . is gone] Fleay, after a conjecture of Sidney Walker's, reads "Robert; and my land, Legitimation name and all is gone," an improvement certainly, but the accepted text is quite sound in meaning.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father:

By long and vehement suit I was seduced
 To make room for him in my husband's bed: 255
 Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!
 Thou art the issue of my dear offence,
 Which was so strongly urged past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
 Madam, I would not wish a better father. 260
 Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
 And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:
 Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
 Subjected tribute to commanding love,
 Against whose fury and unmatched force 265
 The aweless lion could not wage the fight,
 Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
 He that perforce robs lions of their hearts
 May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
 With all my heart I thank thee for my father! 270

257. Thou] F 4; That Ff 1, 2, 3. 267. hand] hands F 4.

257. Thou] If we read That with the first three Folios, then it seems necessary to read thy charge with Staunton and Long MS. in the previous line. Delius reads That, connecting it with my transgression (Wright), which is hardly so likely. Evidence and probability seem equally balanced between Lady Faulconbridge's praying that she should not be punished for her transgression since she was forced into it, and praying that her transgression should not be visited upon the innocent issue of it.

257. dear offence] either offence for which I have paid dearly (as Mr. Wright suggests), or my own private offence. Compare Richard II. i. i. 130:—

"Upon remainder of a dear account."

266. The aweless lion, etc.] Alluding to the legend of Cœur-de-lion. Richard, being in the clutches of the King of Almain, is to be put to death by a fasting lion. The beast, however, is nearly felled by a blow from Richard's fist, and as it is opening its mouth to roar previous to renewing the attack, Richard thrusts his arm down its throat and tears out its heart, which he eats later before the assembled court (see Ellis, Early Eng. Metr. Romances, pp. 296, 297).

Who lives and dares but say thou didst not well
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.

Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin ;

And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin : 275
Who says it was, he lies ; I say 'twas not.

[Exeunt.

276. Who says . . . 'twas not] "The stanza is nonsense as the last line now stands. . . . Shakespeare unquestionably wrote :—

'If thou hadst said him "nay," it had been sin.

Who says "ay" was, he lies ; I say 'twas not' "

(Vaughan). Vaughan's suggestion seems quite un-Shakespearian. Still, literally, the stanza is nonsense in its present shape. The meaning is obvious, but we arrive at it by wrestling round the "it" in the last line to mean Lady Faulconbridge's surrender to Cœur-de-lion.

ACT II

SCENE I.—France. Before Angiers.

Enter AUSTRIA and forces, drums, etc., on one side: on the other KING PHILIP of France and his power; LEWIS, ARTHUR, CONSTANCE, and attendants.

Low. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.

Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave Duke came early to his grave: 5
And for amends to his posterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf,
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John: 10
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death
The rather that you give his offspring life,

Act II. Scene I.] This is the second scene of Act I. in the Folios.

2. great forerunner] Shakespeare is here in error if "forerunner" is taken to mean direct ancestor. Cœur-de-lion and King John were both uncles of Arthur.

7. At our importance] Upon our importuning him. Compare Twelfth Night, v. i. 371:—

"Maria writ
The letter at Sir Toby's great importance."

13. The rather that] All the more because. Compare Hamlet, iv. vii. 70:—

“My lord, I will be ruled;
The rather, if you could devise it so
That I might be the organ.”

Shadowing their right under your wings of war:

I give you welcome with a powerless hand, 15

But with a heart full of unstained love:

Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lsw. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,

As seal to this indenture of my love, 20

That to my home I will no more return,

Till Angiers and the right thou hast in France,

Together with that pale, that white-faced shore,

Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides

And coops from other lands her islanders, 25

Even till that England, hedged in with the main,

That water-walled bulwark, still secure

And confident from foreign purposes,

Even till that utmost corner of the west

Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy, 30

Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,

Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength

To make a more requital to your love!

29. utmost] Ff 1, 2, 3; outmost F 4.

18. do thee right] take thy part. A common Shakespearian usage. *

25. coops] protects by shutting in. So 3 Henry VI. v. i. 109: "Alas! I am not coop'd here for defence." This speech recalls Gaunt's dying words in Richard II., and may have some bearing on the question of the dating of King John and Richard II. See Introduction, p. xxxii.

26. main] Hakluyt generally used this word for mainland. We have "a main of waters" in The Mer- chant of Venice, v. i. 97, a poetical expression which may be rendered as "the continent of waters." It would then mark the transition between main = land and main = water. Compare "Sailing the Spanish main" in the Wreck of the Hesperus. See also Friar Bacon (1594), ed. Gayley. One reading of l. viii. 59, 60 has:—

"And draw the dolphins to thy lovely eyes

To daunce lavoltas in the purple main."

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their swords
In such a just and charitable war. 36

K. Phi. Well then, to work: our cannon shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town.
Call for our chiefe-t men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages: 40
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy. Andrew

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvised you stain your swords with blood: 45
My Lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace which here we urge in war,
And then we shall repent each drop of blood
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter CHATILLON.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady! lo, upon thy wish, 50
Our messenger Chatillon is arrived!
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

37. work: our] work, our F 4; work our F 3; worke our Ff 1, 2.

37. cannon] To avoid the anachronism Pope substituted "engines" for "cannon," with needless precision.

40. To cull, etc.] Either "to select positions which will be most favourable to us" (Steevens, Mr. Wright), or to take counsel together, to discuss the most profitable plans. The latter explanation seems to fall in more with calling upon the "chiefest men of discipline."

45. unadvised] unadvisedly, hastily.

49. indirectly] generally means underhandedly in Shakespeare.

Compare The Merchant of Venice, iv. i. 359:—

"indirectly and directly too Thou hast contrived against the very life."

The meaning here is nearer to "indirectly" than to "underhandedly," although precipitating a fight before the return of a possibly peaceful answer from the opponent might be called "indirection" by an honourable soldier. Cotgrave has "Indirectement: in-directly, . . . by unfit means."

53. coldly] dispassionately.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege
 And stir them up against a mightier task. 55
 England, impatient of your just demands,
 Hath put himself in arms: the adverse winds,
 Whose leisure I have stay'd, have given him time
 To land his legions all as soon as I;
 His marches are expedient to this town, 60
 His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
 With him along is come the mother-queen,
 An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife;
 With her ^{her} niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;
 With them a bastard of the king's deceased; 65
 And all the unsettled humours of the land,
 Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
 With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens,
 Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
 Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs, 70

70. birthrights] Ff 1, 2; birthright Ff 3, 4.

60. His marches . . . town] He is marching to this town with all expedition. See line 223 infra:—

"Who painfully with much expedient march
 Have brought a countercheck before your gates";
 and iv. ii. 268 infra:—

"to my closet bring
 The angry lords with all expedient haste."

63. Ate] Rowe's famous emendation of the Ace of the Folios. Compare Julius Cæsar, III. i. 271: "Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge, With Ate by his side come hot from hell." See also Friar Bacon (1594), ed. Gayley, I. x. 137:—

"Fond Atæ, doomer of bad boading fates, That wrappes proud fortune in thy snaky locks."

65. a bastard . . . deceased] We should now say "a bastard of the deceased king's." This inversion was common in Elizabethan writings, yet it was apparently corrected in Folios 2-4, which read "king's." The line is almost verbally the same in Troublesome Raigne: "Next a bastard of the kings deceast."

67. voluntaries] volunteers. Compare Cotgrave, "volontarie, one that serves anything without pay or pension."

68. dragons' spleens] Richard III. v. "us with the spleen of dragons." The dragon was a symbol of wild fowl of Bartholomew's Fortal Sanitatis of . . .

70. Bearing birthrights, etc.] Compare Henry VIII. 164:—

To make a hazard of new fortunes here:
 In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits
 Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er
 Did never float upon the swelling tide,
 To do offence and scath in Christendom. 75
[Drum beats.]

The interruption of their churlish drums
 Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,
 To parley or to fight; therefore prepare.
K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!
Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much 80
 We must awake endeavour for defence;
 For courage mounteth with occasion:
 Let them be welcome then; we are prepared.

Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, BLANCH, the BASTARD, Lords, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
 Our just and lineal entrance to our own; 85
 If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven,
 Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
 Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven.
K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
 From France to England, there to live in peace. 90

"O, many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them."
 73. bottoms] vessels. Used technically in this sense at the present day.

77. circumstance] detailed description, attendant detail. Compare Othello, III. iii. 355: "Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war."

82. with occasion] when the emergency demands.

87. Whiles] The genitive form of while (A.S. hwil) used adverbially.
 Common in Shakespeare. Rowe reads Whilst.

88. beats] Hanmer reads beat, making that refer to the plural pronoun contained in their and not to contempt
 —a needless alteration.

England we love; and for that England's sake
 With burden of our armour here we sweat.
 This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
 But thou from loving England art so far,
 That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king, 95
 Cut off the sequence of posterity,
 Out-faced infant state, and done a rape
 Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
 Look here upon thy brother Geffrey's face;
 These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
 This little abstract doth contain that large 101
 Which died in Geffrey, and the hand of time
 Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
 That Geffrey was thy elder brother born,
 And this' his son; England was Geffrey's right, 105
 And this is Geffrey's in the name of God;

106. Geffrey's . . . God;] Geffreyes in the name of God: Ff 1, 2, 3 (Geffreys F 3); Geffreys, in the name of God, F 4; Geffrey's: in the name of God Cambridge Editors.

95. That . . . king] That thou hast undermined the lawful king of England. His is the neuter possessive pronoun. Collier MS. reads her, to agree with the personification of England.

97. Out-faced infant state] Gould conjectures "Out-raced infant right." Mr. Wright explains the line as "browbeaten, put down by intimidation or bravado, the state that belongs to an infant." "Out-faced" is simple enough, but "infant state" offers some difficulty. How can the state or majesty that belongs to an infant be browbeaten? And can John's conduct be described in this way? Can "out-raced" mean "out-rooted"? Compare "a race of ginger" = a root of ginger.

101. This little abstract, etc.] Philip calls Arthur a small copy of the larger volume, Geffrey. Compare Edward III. II. i. 82:—

"Whose body is an abstract or a brief Contains each general virtue in the world."

106. And this is Geffrey's . . . God] Apart from the variations in the punctuation of the Folios this reading has much exercised the critics. The difficulty lies in the phrase "And this is Geffrey's." We cannot add "son" because of the previous line. Vaughan suggests "And is this Geffrey's," i.e. Arthur's, as opposed to "that" Geffrey's—the dead father's. Failing that, and following out the same idea, he would read "And this is Geffrey." In default of better, Vaughan's suggestion is preferable to the others.

How comes it then that thou art call'd a king,
 When living blood doth in these temples beat,
 Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission,
 France, 110

To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs good thoughts
 In any breast of strong authority,
 To look into the blots and stains of right:
 That judge hath made me guardian to this boy: 115
 Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
 And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

K. Phi. Excuse; it is to beat usurping down.

Eli. Who is it thou dost call usurper, France? 120

Const. Let me make answer; thy usurping son.

Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
 That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true

113. breast] beast F 1. 119. Excuse;] so Malone; Excuse it is Ff.

109. owe] own. Frequent in Shakespeare. Compare Comedy of Errors, III. i. 42:—

"What art thou that keepest me out from the house I owe?"

111. from thy articles] Hanmer prints "to." "Articles" are the sections of a formal document, and the idea conveyed here is that Philip has been taxing John as if he were reading a formal indictment.

112. supernal] This is the sole use of the word by Shakespeare, but it is found in contemporaries. See Cotgrave, Sir Thomas More, Milton. Formed by analogy with infernal (Mr. Wright).

123. That thou . . . world]

Staunton, with great probability, claims this as a metaphor taken from chess.

124, 125. My bed . . . husband] It seems strange that Constance should compare her own fidelity with that of the person whom she accuses of infidelity a moment later (line 130). Elinor too had been divorced from Louis VII. for infidelity. To avoid the difficulty Vaughan proposes to read: "As to me was my husband." It may be that Shakespeare was content to make Constance femininely illogical in her passion. Mr. Craig's suggestion that Constance meant "My bed was at least as true as yours" avoids the difficulty.

As time was to thy husband; and this boy 125

Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey

Than thou and John in manners; being as like

As rain to water, or devil to his dam.

My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think

His father never was so true begot: 130

It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. Hear the crier.

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you, 135

An a' may catch your hide and you alone:

You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,

Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard:

I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right;

Sirrah, look to't; i' faith, I will, i' faith. 140

127. John in manners; being] Capell; John, in manners being Ff.
133. There's . . . thee] Pope; two lines in Ff, ending boy, . . . thee.

127. John in manners; being] Vaughan suggests "manners,—being," for the comparison of devil and his dam is, of course, more closely connected with John and his mother than with Arthur and Constance. The "devil and his dam" are evidently two personages from the Moralities plays. Compare Ralph Roister Doister, II. iv. 38: "the devil's dam was ne'er so bang'd in hell." "Play the devil" (line 135) would mean "play as violent a part as the devil of the Moralities."

132. blots] impute dishonour to. Continually used as noun and verb in this connection by Elizabethan writers.

136. your hide] Austria was wearing the lion's skin he had taken from Cœur-de-lion.

137. the proverb] Given by Erasmus amongst his Adagia: "mortuo leoni et lepores insultant." Compare Return from Parnassus (p. 71, ed. Maury): "Soe hares may pull dead lions by the bearde."

139. smoke] beat. Halliwell says that in Devonshire it means "to strike a person," and in the North "to strike severely." To strike one so as to make dust fly out of the

Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe
That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him
As great Alcides shows upon an ass:
But, ass, I'll take that burthen from your back, 145
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What cracker is this same that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
King Philip, determine what we shall do straight.

K. Phi. Women and fools, break off your conference. 150
King John, this is the very sum of all;
England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?

152. Anjou] Theobald; Angiers Ff.

144. Alcides shows] The Folios read "Alcides shoes" ("shoes," F 4). Editors quote a proverb from Gosson's Schoole of Abuse: "Too draw the Lyon's skin upon Aesop's Asse, Hercules shoes on a childes feete." It may therefore be possible that Shakespeare had a confused recollection of Gosson's lines in his mind and that the reading of the Folios is correct. Fleay prints "shoes . . . ape," and suggests "dwarf" or "child" to take the place of "ass." Rejecting "shows" and "shoes," Keightley reads "shew'd," and suggests "should." Hudson, following a conjecture of Vaughan's, reads "does." Kinnear conjectures "spoil," and Gould "robes." Mr. Worrall (see Warwick ed.) suggests that if "shows" is right, it is a verb. The reading in the text is that of Theobald, followed by most modern editors. It is in any case preferable to the Folios' reading, which can only be defended by supposing that Shakespeare was guilty of a most senseless confusion. There is no possible point in speaking of an ass wearing the shoes of Hercules, and as Vaughan pointed out, the question concerns something worn or borne upon the back.

147. cracker] boaster. Cotgrave has "se vanter, . . . to crack." Compare Rulph Roister Doister, i. i. 35:—

"All the day long is he facing and cracking
Of his great acts in fighting and fraymaking."

And compare the modern "a thing much cracked-up," i.e. boasted about, and "a crack player."

149. King Philip] The Folios read "King Lewis." The emendation is Theobald's. Lewis was not king, and Austria was not likely to appeal to him for a final decision in anything of moment. We must, therefore, suppose a mistaken substitution of Lewis for Philip.

K. John. My life as soon: I do defy thee, France. 155
 Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
 And out of my dear love I'll give thee more
 Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
 Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child.

Const. Do, child, go to it grandam, child; 160
 Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
 There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!

I would that I were low laid in my grave:

I am not worth this coil that's made for me. 165

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whether she does or no!
 His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames
 Draws those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
 Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; 170

156. Bretagne] Hanmer: Bretagne
 168. wrights] Ff 1, 2, 3; wrights

F 3; Brittain F 4.

156. Bretagne] This is a Hanmer's, in spite of its of French pronunciation, by most modern editors confusion with Britain speare spelt Britanny and the same way.

160, etc. it] Baby talk this case although uninf contemporary his or for the often found. Capell could
 "it" to remain and read
 Pope put the whole passage spurious, from "Submit
 "repetitions," in spite of as 165, 168 172.

165. coil] Cotgrave has us garboil, hurly-burly, e thought to be Celtic many other words of degree. Probably of (see New Eng.

wrongs, . . . shames usual defence of this or—if error it be—that he has been slipped in minative and verb, does here. Educated Eliza-fully made this apparen
 a full discussion
 Prof. Case's Prefand fourth edition, or patra in this ser/ in

Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth!

Call not me slanderer; thou and thine usurp 175

The dominations, royalties and rights

Of this oppressed boy: this is thy eld'st son's son,

Infortunate in nothing but in thee:

Thy sins are visited in this poor child;

The canon of the law is laid on him, 180

Being but the second generation

Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,

That he is not only plagued for her sin,

But God hath made her sin and her the plague 185

175. not me] Ff 1, 2, 3; me not F 4. 176. dominations] F 1; domination Ff 2, 3, 4. 177. this is thy eld'st] Capell; this is thy eldest Ff.

171. crystal . . . bribed] Mr. Craig suggests that here we have a reflection of the old voyagers' stories of bribing Indians with beads.

180. The canon . . . on him] The sins of Elinor, Arthur's grandmother, are being visited upon her grandson, according to the canon of the law, even to the third and fourth generation.

183. Bedlam] Lunatic. Rann, after a conjecture of Ritson's, reads (quite possibly) "Beldam," but compare King Lear, III. vii. 103: "Let's follow the old earl, and get the bed-jam To lead him where he would." derived from the Bethlehem Hospital for the Insane.

by 185. But God hath made her sin, case. We follow the punctuation suggested by Roby, who explains the passage as follows: "God hath made her sin and herself to be a plague to this distant child, who is punished for her and with the punishment belonging to her: God has made her sin to be an injury to Arthur, and her injurious deeds to be the executioner to punish her sin: all which (vis. her first sin and her now injurious deeds) are punished in the person of this child." The only difficulty here is the use of "injury" in two ways, the first meaning injury to Arthur, and the second meaning injurious deeds perpetrated by Elinor. The Folios read (line 187) "with her plague her sinne." The passage is difficult and has given rise to all kinds of suggestions. Malone supposed that two half lines had been dropped after "And with her."

On this removed issue, plagued for her
 And with her plague; her sin his injury,
 Her injury the beadle to her sin,
 All punish'd in the person of this child,
 And all for her; a plague upon her! 190

Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
 A will that ^{bars} ~~bars~~ the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;
 A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate: 195
 It ill beseems this presence to cry aim
 To these ill-tuned repetitions.

Some trumpet summon hither to the walls
 These men of Angiers: let us hear them speak
 Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's. 200

Trumpet sounds. Enter certain Citizens upon the walls.

First Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls?

K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.

K. John. England, for itself.

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—

K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
 Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle,— 205

K. John. For our advantage; therefore hear us first.

190. And . . . her] Mr. Craig suggests that Shakespeare wrote "And all for her, for her; a plague upon her!"

196. cry aim] "To cry aim" meant in the first place, to encourage archers when shooting. The bystanders evidently used to cry "Aim!" It then came to mean encouragement in general. Compare M. . . Windsor, III. ii. 45:

violent proceedings all thy neighbours shall cry aim." Several editors have endeavoured to improve the passage. Jonson suggested that "aim" was an abbreviation of "J'aime"!

198. Some . . . walls] Mr. Craig suggests "Sound trumpet! Summon hither to the walls."

205. parle] parley, conference, or in speech. So constantly in Elizabethan plays.

These flags of France, that are advanced here
 Before the eye and prospect of your town,
 Have hither march'd to your endamagement:
 The cannons have their bowels full of wrath, 210
 And ready mounted are they to spit forth
 Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
 All preparation for a bloody siege
 And merciless proceeding by these French
 Confronts your city's eyes, your winking gates; 215
 And but for our approach those sleeping stones,
 That as a waist doth girdle you about,
 By the compulsion of their ordinance
 By this time from their fixed beds of lime
 Had been dishabited, and wide havoc made 220
 For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
 But on the sight of us your lawful king,
 Who painfully with much expedient march
 Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
 To save unscratch'd your city's threatened cheeks, 225
 Behold, the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle;

215. Confronts your] Capell; Comfort yours Ff 1, 2; Comfort your Ff 3, 4; Confront your Rowe; Come 'fore your Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.).

207. advanced] lifted up (a common Elizabethan meaning). Compare Cotgrave, "Haussé : hoised, raised, advanced, . . . hoven up, . . . set aloft."

215. winking] closed at our approach. "To wink," in the sense of closing both eyes, is common in Elizabethan English. Compare Promos and Cassandra (pt. i.), v. v. : ". . . your eyes harde you must close. . . Winke harde"; and Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 333, line 28) : "though I wink at a flash of lightning, I dare open my eyes again."

217. waist] a garment worn round the waist. The modern American lady calls a blouse a "waist." Compare Spenser's Ditty to Eliza : "gird in your waist, For more fineness with a tawdry lace."

217. doth] Here we have "stones" nominative to "doth," perhaps owing to the interposition of the singular noun "waist." But see note on ll. 168, 169 above.

220. Had been . . . made] Fleay regularises the line by reading "dishabit"—needlessly. Compare l. i. 20 and note above.

And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,
 To make a shaking fever in your walls,
 They shoot but calm words folded up in smoke,
 To make a faithless error in your ears: 230
 Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
 And let us in, your king, whose labour'd spirits
 Forwearied in this action of swift speed
 Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both. 235

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
 Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
 Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet,
 Son to the elder brother of this man,
 And king o'er him and all that he enjoys: 240
 For this down-trodden equity, we tread
 In warlike march these greens before your town,
 Being no further enemy to you
 Than the constraint of hospitable zeal
 In the relief of this oppressed child 245
 Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
 To pay that duty which you truly owe
 To him that owes it, namely this young prince:
 And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,

234. Crave] Pope; Craves Ff. '

229. They shoot . . . smoke] Compare Lucrece, 1027: "This helpless smoke of words doth me no right."

233. Forwearied] Completely wearied, tired out. The prefix for is exactly equivalent to the German ver-.

234. Crave] See above.

236. in] We s

247, 248. owe, . . . owes] The two meanings of "owe" are used. Compare "owes," which Pope needlessly altered to "owns," with line 109 above.

249. arms] Vaughan suggests "army" as more in keeping with the "muzzled bear, and as saving the

Save in aspect, hath all offence seal'd up; 250
 Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
 Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
 And with a blessed and unvex'd retire,
 With unhack'd swords and helmets all unbruised,
 We will bear home that lusty blood again 255
 Which here we came to spout against your town,
 And leave your children, wives and you in peace.
 But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
 'Tis not the roundure of your old-faced walls
 Can hide you from our messengers of war, 260
 Though all the English and their discipline
 Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
 Then tell us, shall your city call us lord,
 In that behalf which we have challenged it?
 Or shall we give the signal to our rage 265
 And stalk in blood to our possession?

First Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects:

For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

First Cit. That can we not; but he that proves the king, 270

253. unvex'd] unharassed.

253. retire] retreat. Compare
Henry V. iv. iii. 86:—

“that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire”;

and line 326 infra.

258. proffer'd offer] The repetition of sound here has worried the critics;
 but the “proper offer” of Jervis, the “proffer'd love” of S. Walker, the “proffer'd peace” of Hudson, do not seem needful or convincing.

259. roundure] The Folios read “rounder,” as often with French words in -ure. Compare Sonnet xxi.:

 “. . . all things rare That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems”; and cincture, iv. iii. 155 infra.

259. old-faced] Williams' conjecture of “bold-faced” looks very probable.
 “Old-faced” does not seem particularly apt in the light of the context.
 The same scholar would alter “rude” in line 262 to “wide.” We might suppose that Philip is belittling the fortifications of Angiers, which would justify reading “old-faced” and “rude.”

To him will we prove loyal: till that time
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the king?
And if not that, I bring you witnesses, 274
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed,—

Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.

K. Phi. As many and as well-born bloods as those—

Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim. 280

First Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet, 285
- In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

K. Phi. Amen, amen! Mount, chevaliers! to arms!

Bast. Saint George, that swinged the dragon, and e'er since

Sits on his horse back at mine hostess' door,

288, 289. Saint George . . . door] So Pope; the Folios end the first line at dragon.

276. Bastards, and else] Mr. Moore-Smith seems more accurate than Schmidt in taking this to mean "Bastards and otherwise" instead of "Bastards and such-like."

281. compound] settle among yourselves. Compare The Taming of the Shrew, i. ii. 27: "We will compound this quarrel."

285. fleet] flit. Compare The Merchant of Venice, iv. i. 135: "Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet."

288, 289. Saint George . . . door]

The sign of "St. George and the Dragon" must have been very common in Elizabethan times; indeed it is not uncommon nowadays. Compare Lyly, Euphues (ed. Arber, p. 47, line 288): "St. George, who is ever on horseback yet never rideth."

288. swinged] thrashed, whipped. A.S. swingan, to beat. Compare 2 Henry IV. v. iv. 21:—

"I will have you swinged soundly for this."

289. horse] Perhaps we ought to read horse to indicate the possessive.

Teach us some fence! [To Aust.] Sirrah, were I at home, 290

At your den, sirrah, with your lioness,
I would set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace! no more.

Bast. O, tremble, for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth 295
In best appointment all our regiments.

Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall be so; and at the other hill Command the rest to stand. God and our right!
[Exeunt.]

Here after excursions, enter the Herald of France, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates, 300
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in,
Who by the hand of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground:
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies, 305
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,

290. some fence] literally "some fencing." Compare "An I thought he had been so valiant and cunning in fence" (Twelfth Night, III. iv. 312), and the phrase "a master of fence."

292. I would . . . hide] One more variation of the inevitable Elizabethan joke on the cuckold's horns.

304. bleeding ground] Note the transference of the adjective.

308, 309. Upon the . . . display'd] Vaughan connects "triumphantly display'd" with "French." Why he should prefer this to the far more natural "banners" does not appear. Keightley inverts the line into

Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
 To enter conquerors, and to proclaim 310
 Arthur of Bretagne England's king and yours.

Enter English Herald, with trumpet.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells;
 King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
 Commander of this hot malicious day:
 Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright, 315
 Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood;
 There stuck no plume in any English crest
 That is removed by a staff of France:
 Our colours do return in those same hands
 That did display them when we first march'd forth;
 And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come 321
 Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
 Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes:
 Open your gates and give the victors way.

First Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might behold, 325
 From first to last, the onset and retire

318. a staff] any staff Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.).

"Triumphantly display'd; who are at hand." This seems unnecessary.

316. Hither . . . blood] Compare Macbeth, II. iii. 118:—

"Here lay Duncan

His silver skin laced with his golden blood";

and Ford, 'Tis Pity, v. vi.: "gilt with the blood of a fair sister and a hapless father." Compare also the phrase "red gold."

318. staff] Here used as equivalent for the whole spear.

323. Dyed . . . dying] The play upon words is obvious, and "dying slaughter" may be compared with "bleeding ground," line 304 supra.

To transfer dying to fast would hardly be an improvement, and we are forced to believe that the fast sacrificed sense to metre. The fast playing with fast.

325. First . . . the person here mentioned is called Hubert de Bourne, who retains this, in the Chronicle of Hubert de Bourne. The Chronicle suggests that Hubert de Bourne and of the same name by the same name. The Chronicle suggests that the two names are two dis-

line 253 and note

Of both your armies; whose equality
 By our best eyes cannot be censured:
 Blood hath bought blood and blows have answered
 blows;
 Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power: 330
 Both are alike; and both alike we like.
 One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
 We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Re-enter the two Kings, with their powers, severally.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
 Say, shall the current of our right run on? 335
 Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
 Shall leave his native channel, and o'erswell
 With course disturb'd even thy confining shores,
 Unless thou let his silver water keep
 A peaceful progress to the ocean. 340
K. Phi. England, thou hast not saved one drop of blood,
 In this hot trial, more than we of France;
 Rather, lost more. And by this hand I swear,

335. run] Ff 3, 4; runne F 2; rome F 1; roam Malone; foam Nicholson conj.

327, 328. whose equality . . . censured] our best eyes cannot distinguish between the two claimants, so equally matched are you. Malone says, "Our author ought to have written 'whose superiority,' or 'whose inequality' cannot be censured." Vaughan explains, "whose equality is so exact that our best eyes can see no flaw in its completeness," and adds that "censure appears to be a term specially applicable to the discrimination of differences." The instance he quotes (Henry VIII. i.

i. 33) is not, however, convincing. An old dictionary (1696) by Coles gives "Censure: to judge, give sentence," and the meaning "to judge" seems sufficient for our passage.

335. shall . . . run on] Compare v. iv. 56: "And calmly run on in obedience." In view of this there is no doubt that run is the preferable reading.

344. climate] Here a portion of the sky. In Richard II. iv. i. 130 it is used for a region of the earth ("That

That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
 Before we will lay down our just-borne arms, 345
 We'll put thee down 'gainst whom these arms we bear,
 Or add a royal number to the dead,
 Gracing the scroll that tells of this war's loss
 With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers, 350
 When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
 O, now doth Death line his dead chaps with steel;
 The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
 And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men,
 In undetermined differences of kings. 355
 Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
 Cry "havoc!" kings; back to the stained field,
 You equal potents, fiery kindled spirits!

358. fiery kindled] fiery-kindled Pope; fire-ykindled Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.); fire-enkindled Lettsom conj.

in a Christian climate souls refined Should show as heinous . . .").
 Cotgrave has "Climat: a clime, or climate; a division in the skie, or portion of the world, between south and north"; Coles (1696) "Climote
 (sic): clime, such a space of earth (between two parallel lines) as makes half an hour's difference in the sundials and length of days."

350. towers] soars. See v. ii. 149 infra. A hawking term. A grouse that rises high before dropping after being mortally struck is still said to "tower."

354. mouseing] generally given as "tearing, as a cat tears a mouse."
 A much better sense is given by taking the more obvious meaning of gnawing, nibbling as a mouse does.
 The "Well moused, Lion!" of A
Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. i. 274, will also bear this interpretation. It is perhaps worth noting that Halliwell gives "to mouch" = "to eat up greedily" (Linc.), and Coles, "to eat up all."

357. "havoc!"] The crying of
 "havoc!" was the signal for indiscriminate slaughter. Compare Julius Cæsar, III. i. 273:—

"Cry 'Havoc,' and let slip the dogs of war."
 The New Eng. Dict. quotes (1385)
Ord. War Richard II. in Black Bk.
Admiralty (Rolls), i. 455:—

"Item, qe nul soit si hardy de crier havok sur peine d'avoir la teste coupe."

358. equal potents] equally matched powers.

358. fiery kindled] See readings in the variant, supra. I would suggest "fury-kindled spirits." Compare Edward III. III. iii. 113: "Or that enkindled fury turn to flame"; and Richard II. I. i. 152: "Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be ruled by me."

Then let confusion of one part confirm
 The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death! 360

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?

K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

First Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.

K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy, 365

And bear possession of our person here,

Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

First Cit. A greater power than we denies all this;

And till it be undoubted, we do lock

Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates; 370

King'd of our fears, until our fears, resolved,

Be by some certain king purged and deposed.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings,

And stand securely on their battlements,

As in a theatre, whence they gape and point 375

At your industrious scenes and acts of death.

362. who's] Ff 2, 3, 4; whose F 1.

367. of you] Ff 1, 4; if you Ff 2, 3.

367. Lord of our presence] See i. i. 137 supra. Vaughan's explanation of the use in Act i. would not hold here. Mr. Wright says "presence" here means "personal dignity"; but it seems difficult to think that John means "I am here master of my personal dignity, of Angiers, and of you." I should imagine "Lord of our presence" to mean "Lord of the title by which I am generally known, i.e. King of England, and also Lord of Angiers and of you."

371. King'd of our fears] So Rann, after a conjecture of Tyrwhitt's. Folios 1 and 2 read "Kings of our fears," and 3 and 4, "Kings of our fear"—having our fears for king. Various other readings have been suggested, but none seem worth comparing with Tyrwhitt's suggestion.

373. scroyles] scabby fellows, a term of utmost contempt. Compare Cotgrave, "une escrouellée, an infected traiterous or depraved spirit"; "Les escrouelles, the King's evil." Compare Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. i.: "hang them, scroyles."

376. At your . . . death] At the scenes and acts of death which you industriously perform. For the trans-

Your royal presences be ruled by me:
 Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
 Be friends awhile and both conjointly bend
 Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town: 380
 By east and west let France and England mount
 Their battering cannon charged to the mouths,
 Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawld down
 The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
 I'd play incessantly upon these jades, 385
 Even till unfenced desolation
 Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
 That done, dissever your united strengths,
 And part your mingled colours once again;
 Turn face to face and bloody point to point; 390
 Then, in a moment, Fortune shall cull forth
 Out of one side her happy minion,
 To whom in favour she shall give the day,
 And kiss him with a glorious victory.

379. awhile] a-while Ff 1, 2; a while Ff 3, 4.

ference of adjective, compare line 304 supra. Capell reads "illustrious."

378. mutines] Spedding needlessly conjectures mutiners. Compare Hamlet, v. ii. 6: "Methought I lay worse than the mutines in the bilboes." The reference is to the leaders of the factions in Jerusalem, John of Giscela and Simon bar Gioras, who stopped their internecine strife in order to fight against the Romans (see Josephus, Jewish Wars, bk. v. chs. 2 and 6). Since Josephus was not translated until 1602, Mr. Wright believes Shakespeare's source to have been Peter Morwyng's translation of the spurious narrative of Joseph ben Gorion.

383. soul-fearing] causing the soul to fear. Compare The Merchant of Venice, II. i. 9:—

"I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine Hath fear'd the valiant."

Compare Ralph Roister Doister, Induction (ed. Dent, p. 13, line 85): "We'll fear our children with him; if they be never so unruly do but cry, Ralph comes . . . and they'll be as quiet as lambs."

392. minion] Cotgrave has "Mignon: a minion, favourite, wanton, dilling, darling." Compare 1 Henry IV. I. i. 83: "Who is sweet Fortunes minion and her pride." Used often as a slighting term in Shakespeare.

How like you this wild counsel, mighty states? 395
Smacks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knit our powers
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then after fight who shall be king of it? 400

Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls; 404
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why then defy each other, and pell-mell,
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven or hell.

K. Phi. Let it be so. Say, where will you assault?

K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom. 410

Aust. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

411. thunder] thunders Grant White (Capell conj.).

395. states] persons in high positions. Compare Troilus and Cressida, iv. v. 65: "Hail, all you state of Greece." Compare also "infant state" (ii. i. 97 supra).

396. the policy] Gould suggests "true policy." Schmidt explains "the policy you make so much of"; Mr. Wright, "the policy which is so much thought of." Cotgrave and Coles equate policy with government, a meaning which lends colour to Mr. Moore-Smith's conjecture of "Has it not some smack or savour of the political art." In the light of this meaning, Gould's suggestion of "true" for "the" is tempting. In Elizabethan plays the word denotes crafty dealings. Compare Middleton's Roaring Girl, ii. 2: "By opposite policies, courses indirect"; ibid. iv. 1: "I'll make her policy the art to trap her"; and Webster's Vittoria Corombona (ed. Dyce, p. 11, col. 2):—

"So who knows policy and her true aspect, Shall find her ways winding and indirect."

406. pell-mell] Cotgrave has "Peslemelle : pell-mell, confusedly, hand over head, all on a heap, one with another."

412. drift] the shower of bullets compared to snow driven by the wind.

Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south.

Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth:

I'll stir them to it. Come, away, away! 415

First Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe awhile to stay,

And I shall show you peace and fair-faced league;

Win you this city without stroke or wound;

Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,

That here come sacrifices for the field: 420

Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on with favour; we are bent to hear.

First Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the Lady Blanch,

Is niece to England: look upon the years

Of Lewis the Dauphin and that lovely maid: 425

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,

Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?

If zealous love should go in search of virtue,

Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?

If love ambitious sought a match of birth, 430

Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,

Is the young Dauphin every way complete:

If not complete of, say he is not she;

421. Persever] Ff 1, 2; Persevere Ff 3, 4. 422. Speak on with favour;
we] Speak on with favour, we Ff; Speak on; with favour we Rowe. 424.
niece] So Singer, ed. 2 (Colliet MS.); neere Ff 1, 2; neer Ff 3, 4. 428.
should] omitted in Ff 2, 3, 4.

418, 419. Win you . . . Rescue] I shall win you . . . I shall rescue.

422. Speak on . . . to hear] We grant you leave to speak on; we are listening.

424. niece] The reading of the Folios is an obvious misprint. Compare Troublesome Raigne :—

"The beauteous daughter of the King of Spaine, Neece to K. Iohn, the lovely Ladie Blanch."

434. complete of] There seems to be no other instance of the use of this phrase, and several emendations have been suggested. Hanmer, "If not complete, oh say, he is not she"; Kinnear for "of" reads "so." "So," with the long s, may have been printed "os" and read as "of."

And she again wants nothing, to name want, 435

If want it be not that she is not he:

He is the half part of a blessed man,

Left to be finished by such as she;

And she a fair divided excellence,

Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. 440

O, two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in;

And two such shores to two such streams made one

Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,

To these two princes, if you marry them. 445

This union shall do more than battery can

To our fast-closed gates; for at this match,

With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,

The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,

And give you entrance: but without this match, 450

The sea enraged is not half so deaf,

Lions more confident, mountains and rocks

More free from motion, no, not Death himself

In mortal fury half so peremptory,

As we to keep this city.

Bast.

Here's a stay

455

438. such as she] Theobald reads, after a conjecture of Thirlby's, "such a she," a very probable reading.

447. match] A play upon the double meaning, the match between the Dauphin and Blanch, and the match to fire the mine. In the next line Pope reads "speed" for "spleen," while Becket conjectures "Swifter than powder can in spleen enforce." We must either take "spleen" to mean "haste" (see v. vii. 50 infra) or suspect the text, for it cannot here bear its more usual meaning of "ill-temper."

454. peremptory] Cotgrave has "peremptoire, . . . absolute, . . . forcible; . . . earnest; that will have no nay."

455. stay] Johnson was dissatisfied with this word, and conjectured "flaw," which Hudson adopted. Becket suggested "say," which Singer adopted in his second edition. Williams suggested "story" or "storm"; Elze (Athenæum, 1867)

That shakes the rotten carcass of old Death
 Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
 That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and seas,
 Talks as familiarly of roaring lions
 As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs! 460
 What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
 He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke and bounce;
 He gives the bastinado with his tongue:
 Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
 But buffets better than a fist of France: 465
 Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words
 Since I first call'd my brother's father dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
 Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
 For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie 470
 Thy now unsured assurance to the crown,
 That yon green boy shall have no sun to ripe
 The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
 I see a yielding in the looks of France;
 Mark, how they whisper: urge them while their souls 475
 Are capable of this ambition,

"bray," Vaughan "style," Herr "away," Gould "slave." None of these are satisfactory. We must assume that "stay" or the word it represents means a sudden check or hindrance. In Cheshire there is a dialectical term "staw'd" applied to a horse who is checked by a difficulty in climbing a hill (Cheshire Folk-Speech, Dialect Society).

462. bounce] The onomatopoeic word for the report of a gun, common in Elizabethan plays. Compare Peele's Old Wives' Tale (1595), ed.

Gayley, line 609: "Dub dub a dub, bounce quoth the guns with a sulphurous huffe snuffe"; and 2 Henry IV. III. ii. 304: "'Bounce' would 'a say"; and Knight of the Burning Pestle, v. i. 94: "'Sa, Sa, Sa, bounce!' quoth the guns." Its modern meaning of bombast does not seem to have developed in Shakespeare's time.

467. Since . . . dad] An inimitable turn of a common saying to suit the Bastard's own case.

468. list to this conjunction] list to the suggestion of this conjunction.

Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

First Cit. Why answer not the double majesties 480

This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first
To speak unto this city: what say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son,
Can in this book of beauty read "I love," 485

Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:

For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,

And all that we upon this side the sea,

Except this city now by us besieged,

Find liable to our crown and dignity, 490

Shall gild her bridal bed, and make her rich

In titles, honours and promotions,

As she in beauty, education, blood,

Holds hand with any princess of the world. 494

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.

Lew. I do, my lord; and in her eye I find

A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,

The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;

477. Lest] F 4; Least Ff 1, 2, 3.
487. Anjou] So Pope; Angiers Ff.

486. a queen] Ff 1, 2; the queen Ff 3, 4.
494. hand] F 1; hands Ff 2, 3, 4.

477-479. Lest zeal . . . it was] Hanmer puts the comma after "melted," thus making the windy breath of soft petitions, pity and remorse do the work of freezing zeal which is now melted. The adjective "soft," however, clearly determines the sense: "Lest [Jackson suggests "let"] the desire which the French king now has to fall in with the suggestion, a desire melted by the windy breath, etc., should cool and freeze into its previous form if advantage be not now taken."

480. the] Lettsom suggests "ye"; but Shakespeare's usage would then require two "ye's"—"Why answer ye not, ye double majesties."

494. Holds hand] Compare the modern phrase "to touch elbows with," i.e. to be the equal of.

Which, being but the shadow of your son,
 Becomes a sun and makes your son a shadow : 500
 I do protest I never loved myself
 Till now infixed I beheld myself
 Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

[Whispers with Blanch.

Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!

Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! 505
 And quarter'd in her heart! he doth espy
 Himself love's traitor: this is pity now,
 That, hang'd and drawn and quarter'd, there should be
 In such a love so vile a lout as he.

Blanch. My uncle's will in this respect is mine: 510
 If he see aught in you that makes him like,
 That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
 I can with ease translate it to my will;
 Or if you will, to speak more properly,
 I will enforce it easily to my love. 515
 Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
 That all I see in you is worthy love,

515. easily] Ff 3, 4; easy Ff 1, 2.

503. table] "the surface on which a picture is painted" (Dyce-Little-dale). Fr. tableau (?). Coles, "Table of Appelles." Compare Sonnet xxiv. 2:—

"Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stell'd

Thy beauty's form in table of my heart";

and Friar Bacon (1595), ed. Gayley,
 i. i. 56:—

"Her form is Beauty's table, where she paints

The glories of her gorgeous excellence."

504-509. Drawn in . . . as he] Mr. Worrall suggests that Shakespeare is here mocking at the love conceits of contemporary sonneteers. The sonnet quoted to illustrate the last note is quite in the vein which Shakespeare is here caricaturing.

512, 513. That any thing . . . my will] That which he sees and likes I can easily bring myself to like too. The "it" in line 513 summing up "That anything he sees" is pleonastic.

517. all . . . worthy love] all I see in you is worthy of love.

Than this; that nothing do I see in you, Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge,

That I can find should merit any hate. 520

K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece?

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do
What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady?

Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love; 525
For I do love her most unfeignedly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine, Maine,
Poitiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin. 530
Philip of France, if thou be pleased withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well; young princes, close your hands.

523. still] will Pope; shall Steevens (1785) (Capell conj.). 533. It likes . . . hands] Rowe; It likes us well young princes: close your hands Ff.

519. churlish] grudging. Cotgrave gives "churlish: aspre, rude, villain." Coles "churlich (sic): plainly, homely." Every other Shakespearian use of the word can be paraphrased by "boorish."

522, 523. still] often bore the meaning of "continually." It has been borrowed, probably from Elizabethan English, into Mid-Cardigan and Carmarthenshire Welsh, where "Y mae'n dyfod still" means "he comes continually" or "regu- larly." We find the same use in the north of Ireland dialect. Compare Milton, Comus, lines 558-560:—

"(Silence) wished she might Deny her nature, and be never more,

Still to be so displaced."

527. Volquessen] "The ancient county of the Velocasses (pagus Velocassinus), whose capital was Rouen; divided in modern times into Vexin Normand and Vexin Français" (Mr. Wright).

- Aust.* And your lips too; for I am well assured
That I did so when I was first assured. 535
- K. Phi.* Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at Saint Mary's chapel presently
The rites of marriage shall be solemnized.
Is not the Lady Constance in this troop? 540
I know she is not, for this match made up
Her presence would have interrupted much:
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.
- Lew.* She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent.
- K. Phi.* And, by my faith, this league that we have made 545
Will give her sadness very little cure.
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage.
- K. John.* We will heal up all; 550
For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Bretagne
And Earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town'

539. rites] F 4; rights Ff 1, 2, 3.

535. assured] betrothed.

538. presently] immediately. Compare The Tempest, iv. i. 42: "Presently? Ay, with a twink."

543. Where . . . knows] The punctuation here is that of Steevens (1793). The Folios have "sonne, . . . knowes?" Steevens evidently takes it to mean "Let him who knows tell me!"

544. passionate] Vaughan suspected "passionate" owing to the extra foot in the line, but has withdrawn his suggested alterations. It may, he says, have been pronounced "pashnate." The word denotes violence of feeling, probably of grief in the case of Constance, not, as would suit the case of Elinor, "in a passion." Compare Arden of Feversham, iii. v. 45: "How now, Alice? what, sad and passionate?" and Middleton, A Trick, iv. ii. (Mermaid ed. p. 53), where Witgood is lamenting and the "2nd Gent." says to him: "Fie! you a firm scholar, and an understanding gentleman, and give your best parts to passion."

We make him lord of. Call the Lady Constance;
 Some speedy messenger bid her repair
 To our solemnity: I trust we shall, 555
 If not fill up the measure of her will,
 Yet in some measure satisfy her so
 That we shall stop her exclamation.
 Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
 To this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp. 560
[Exeunt all but the Bastard.]

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
 Hath willingly departed with a part:
 And France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
 Whom zeal and charity brought to the field 565
 As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear
 With that some purpose-changer, that sly devil,
 That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith,
 That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
 Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids, 570
 Who, having no external thing to lose

555. solemnity] the marriage of the Dauphin and Blanch.

561. composition] agreement. Compare "compound," line 281 supra.

563. departed with] parted with.

566. God's own soldier] Compare Macbeth, v. viii. 45:—

"Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Ross. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!"

566. rounded] whispered. Compare The Winter's Tale, i. ii. 217: "They're here with me already, whispering, rounding ' Sicilia is a so-forth.'" Mr. Wright points out that the proper form of the word is "rouned," from A.S. rūnian, and quotes Piers Plowman (B text), iv. 13: "And ritt riȝte to resoun, and rowneth in his ere." Compare also Gosson's Apology of the Schoole of Abuse (ed. Arber, p. 74): "for his Pypers were ready too rounde him in the eare, what he should speake."

568. broker] agent. The Bastard harps upon the connection of breaking with the sound of "broker."

571, 572. Who . . . cheats] An obvious anacoluthon.

But the word "maid," cheats the poor maid of that,
 That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling Commodity,
 Commodity, the bias of the world,
 The world, who of itself is peised well, See 575
 Made to run even upon even ground,
 Till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias,
 This sway of motion, this Commodity,
 Makes it take head from all indifferency,
 From all direction, purpose, course, intent : 580
 And this same bias, this Commodity,
 This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
 Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
 Hath drawn him from his own determined aid,
 From a resolved and honourable war, 585
 To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
 And why rail I on this Commodity?
 But for because he hath not woo'd me yet :
 Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
 When his fair angels would salute my palm ; 590
 But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
 Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich.
 Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail

573. tickling] flattering. We still speak of tickling a man's side. Compare Coriolanus, i. i. 263 :—

"Such a nature,
 Tickled with good success, dis-dains the shadow

Which he treads on at noon."

Vaughan would read "tickling" as a trisyllable.

574-580. Commodity . . . intent] The Bastard compares Commodity, i.e. Expediency or Self-interest, to the leaden weight inserted in the side of a bowl to give it "bias," the power of running out of the straight peised : poised, balanced. To "take head from all indifferency" is to leave impartiality, to become biased. The "eye," according to Staunton, was the aperture in the bowl where the leaden weight, also called the "bias," was fixed.

590. angels] the angel was a gold coin worth ten shillings in Elizabeth's time.

591. But . . . yet] Because my hand has been untempted as yet.

And say there is no sin but to be rich ;

And being rich, my virtue then shall be 595

To say there is no vice but beggary.

| Since kings break faith upon commodity,

| Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee.

[Exit

ACT III

SCENE I.—The French King's Pavilion.

Enter CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and SALISBURY.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!

False blood to false blood join'd! gone to be friends!

Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;

Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again: 5

It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so:

I trust I may not trust thee; for thy word

Is but the vain breath of a common man:

Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;

I have a king's oath to the contrary. 10

Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,

For I am sick and capable of fears,

Oppress'd with wrongs and therefore full of fears,

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears,

A woman, naturally born to fears; 15

Act III.] Actus Secundus in the Folios, ending at line 74.

12. capable of fears] susceptible to fears. Compare II. i. 476 supra, and Greene's Never Too Late (1600), p. 95: "Mirimadas eares were not capable of any amorous persuasion."

14. widow] This is not historically correct. At this time Constance was married to a third husband, Guido, brother to the Viscount of Thouars. She had been divorced from her second husband, Ranulph, Earl of Chester.

And though thou now confess thou didst but jest,
 With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
 But they will quake and tremble all this day.
 What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
 Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? 20
 What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
 Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
 Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds?
 Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
 Then speak again; not all thy former tale, 25
 But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true as I believe you think them false
 That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
 Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die, 30
 And let belief and life encounter so
 As doth the fury of two desperate men
 Which in the very meeting fall and die.
 Lewis marry Blanch! O boy, then where art thou?
 France friend with England, what becomes of me? 35
 Fellow, be gone: I cannot brook thy sight:
 This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

16, 17. And . . . truce] So Rowe; And . . . jest with . . . spirits, . . . truce Ff. 24. signs] sighs Warburton. 27. you] you'll Keightley.

17. cannot] Pope printed "can't" in order to regularise the line. But "spirits" is often a monosyllable, and the accentuation of the line indicates that it is so here.

19-26. What dost . . . be true] This may be compared with Northumberland's speech on hearing of Hotspur's death (2 Henry IV. i. 1).

23. bounds] containing banks. Compare A Midsummer-Night's Dream, II. i. 92:—

"Have every pelting river made so proud

That they have overborne their continents"— exactly the continenti ripa of Horace.

27, 28. As true . . . saying true] Rather a roundabout asseveration, but quite in the vein of early Shakespeare.

36, 37. Fellow, be gone . . . ugly man] Compare this with Cleopatra's reception of bad news about Antony (Antony and Cleopatra, II. v.).

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?

Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is 40
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. If thou, that bid'st me be content, wert grim,
Ugly and slanderous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains, 45
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content,
For then I should not love thee, no, nor thou
Become thy great birth nor deserve a crown. 50
But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and Fortune join'd to make thee great:
Of Nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies boast
And with the half-blown rose. But Fortune, O,
She is corrupted, changed and won from thee; 55

45. and sightless] unsightly Collier MS.

45. sightless] equivalent in meaning to the "unsightly" of Collier's corrector. Compare the opposite meaning of "sightly" (II. i. 143 supra).

46. swart] black. This was hideous in Elizabethan eyes. Compare Much Ado About Nothing, v. iv. 36: "I'll hold my mind were she an Ethiopie."

46. prodigious] of the nature of a prodigy in the worst sense, therefore monstrous. Compare Richard III. I. ii. 22: "If ever he have child, abortive be it, Prodigious . . ." Cotgrave has "Prodigieux: prodigious, wondrous, monstrous, most unnatural or out of course."

53, 54. lilies . . . rose] These flowers have been generally deemed the fairest by poets. It is interesting to remember in this connection that the lily is the flower of France, the rose that of England. There are many comparisons of the beauty of youths and maids to the beauty of lilies and roses to be found in Shakespeare and other Elizabethan literature. Compare A Midsummer-Night's Dream, III. i. 96:—

"Most lily like in hue
Of colour like the red rose."
See also Tennyson's Maud, xxii. 9:—
"Queen rose of the rosebud garden of girls . . .
Queen lily and rose in one."

She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John,
 And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
 To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
 And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
 France is a bawd to Fortune and King John, 60
 That strumpet Fortune, that usurping John!
 Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
 Envenom him with words, or get thee gone,
 And leave those woes alone which I alone
 Am bound to under-bear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam, 65
 I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt; I will not go with thee:
 I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
 For grief is proud and makes his owner stoop.
 To me and to the state of my great grief 70
 Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great
 That no supporter but the huge firm earth
 Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
 Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

[Seats herself on the ground.]

64. those] these F 4.

56. She adulterates] The Folios print "Sh' adulterates," thus indicating the scansion; meaning = "commits adultery." This somewhat rare use is almost paralleled by Hamlet, i. v. 41: "that adulterate beast" = that "adulterous" beast.

65. under-bear] support. Compare Richard II. i. iv. 29: "And patient underbearing of his fortune."

69. For grief . . . stoop] There is evidently some corruption of the text here, and the context leads one to suspect "stoop" and perhaps "his owner." All the suggested emendations wrest some meaning out of the passage, but not one of them carries conviction with it. Perhaps "proud" is the corrupt word, which ought to be "poor" (as suggested by H. A. C., Athen. 1867) or some such equivalent. This would make Constance say in effect, "I will,—in spite of my grief which is apt to bow me down and make me humble,—be proud in my sorrow and make kings come to me."

Enter KING JOHN, KING PHILIP, LEWIS, BLANCH, ELINOR, the BASTARD, AUSTRIA, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter ; and this blessed day 75
Ever in France shall be kept festival :
To solemnise this day the glorious sun
Stays in his course and plays the alchemist,
Turning with splendour of his precious eye
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold : 80
The yearly course that brings this day about
Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day ! [Rising.
What hath this day deserved ? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters should be set * 85
Among the high tides in the calendar ?
Nay, rather turn this day out of the week,
This day of shame, oppression, perjury.
Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burthens may not fall this day, 90
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd :

82. holiday] holy day Ff 1, 2, 3 ; holy-day F 4.

77-80. To solemnise . . . gold]

Compare Sonnet xxxiii. :—

"Full many a glorious morning have I seen

Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,

Kissing with golden face the meadows green,

Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy."

Compare also A Midsummer-Night's Dream, III. ii. 390 :—

"[I] like a forester, the groves may tread

Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,

Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,

Turns into yellow gold his salt
green streams."

85. golden letters] Probably a reference to the "golden number" used in calculating the feast days of the Church.

86. tides] in the sense of time. Compare "Time and tide wait for no man."
"High tides" would mean festival-days, e.g. Whitsun-tide, Shrove-tide.

90. fall] Whether this means "fall due" or "to fall" literally is not quite clear.

91. prodigiously] Compare line 46
supra.

But on this day let seamen fear no wrack;
 No bargains break that are not this day made:
 This day, all things begun come to ill end,
 Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change! 95

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
 To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
 Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguiled me with a counterfeit Resembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried,
 Proves valueless: you are forsworn, forsworn; 101
 You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
 But now in arms you strengthen it with yours:
 „The grappling vigour and rough frown of war
 Is cold in amity and painted peace, 105

92. on this day] For some inscrutable reason the Folios put "on this day" within brackets. Mr. Craig has suggested that brackets sometimes played the part of commas in F 1. See Cymbeline, I. i. 120:—

"As I (my poor selfe) did exchange."

"But" here means "except," which Pope printed.

92. wrack] I keep the old form, which indicates the pronunciation.

93-95. break . . . come . . . change] These verbs here are in the subjunctive mood expressing a wish.

99. counterfeit] i.e. a counterfeit coin. Cf. Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, iii. 1 (Routledge, p. 453 a):—

"had the slip slurr'd on me
 A counterfeit."

Compare also Lyly, Alexander and Campaspe (1584), Prologue at Court: "As yet we cannot tell what we should tearme our labours, iron or bullion; only it belongeth to your Majestie to make them fit either for the forge or the mynt, currant by the stampe or counterfeit by the anvill."

100. touch'd and tried] tested by being rubbed on a touchstone. A touchstone was generally made of black jasper and the trained eye could tell the fineness of gold rubbed on it by the character of the streak left. Compare Richard III. iv. ii. 8:—

"Now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed."

102, 103. in arms] armed (line 102); in one another's arms (line 103). As Johnson said, "I am afraid here is a clinch intended."

105. cold] The inconsistency of the metaphor has led to many suggestions, most of them introducing other and equally great inconsistencies. It seems to me that the process of transforming vigour and a frown into amity may as well be expressed by "cooling" as by any other figure. I therefore see no reason to tamper with the text.

And our oppression have made up this league.
 Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjured kings!
 A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens!
 Let not the hours of this ungodly day
 Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset, 110
 Set armed discord 'twixt these perjured kings!
 Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust.

Lady Constance, peace!

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.

O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost shame
 That bloody spoil: thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward! 115

Thou little valiant, great in villany!
 Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
 Thou Fortune's champion, that dost never fight
 But when her humorous ladyship is by
 To teach thee safety! thou art perjured too, 120
 And soothest up greatness. What a fool art thou,
 A ramping fool, to brag and stamp and swear

110. day] So Theobald; daies F 1; dayes F 2; days Ff 3, 4. 122. and stamp] to stamp F 4.

106. And our . . . this league] And your oppression of us has joined you together.

114. O Lymoges! O Austria] An unwarrantable identification of the Duke of Austria and the Viscount of Limoges, two entirely different people. See Introduction, pp. xvii. xxvii.

115. bloody spoil] the lion's skin which had previously raised the ire of the Bastard.

119. humorous] i.e. full of different humours, capricious. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, III. i. 76:—

"I, that have been love's whip;
 A very beadle to a humorous sigh."

121. soothest up] i.e. flatterest, dost humour. The tendency so prevalent nowadays to add "up" to verbs without adding much to the sense, except perhaps making the verb emphatic (e.g. "pay up," "smash up"), is to be detected in Elizabethan English. Compare Spanish Tragedy, III. x. 19: "Salve all suspicions, only soothe me up"; and Friar Bacon (1594), I. iii. 21, 22:—

"This is a fairing, gentle sir, indeed,
 To soothe me up with such smooth flatterie."

122. ramping] wildly gesticulating. Cotgrave gives "grimpement:"

Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
 Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side,
 Been sworn my soldier, bidding me depend 125
 Upon thy stars, thy fortune and thy strength,
 And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
 Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
 And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me! 130

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou darest not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope. 135

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven!

To thee, King John, my holy errand is.

I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,

And from Pope Innocent the legate here,

131. calf's skin] Capell; Calves skin Ff 1, 2, 3; Calves-skin F 4.

climbing, crawling, creeping, ramp-ing, running upwards"; and "grim-per: to ramp." "Lion rampant" in heraldry ought therefore to mean a lion climbing, and this is just the attitude of the lions "rampant" given in Woodward and Burnett's Heraldry, i. plate xxi. It would require little imagination however to deem this the representation of a lion seeking whom he might devour, and there is no doubt that in this speech of Constance "ramping" bears the meaning of rushing wildly about.
As Mr. Wright suggests, the lion's skin had something to do with the choice of epithet. Mr. Craig tells me of a Kentish inn called the "Ramping Cat"!

127. fall over] revolt. Compare
1 Henry IV. i. iii. 93:—

"Revolted Mortimer!

"He never did fall off my sovereign liege,

But by the chance of war."

129. calf's-skin] There may be a reference here to the fact mentioned by Sir John Hawkins that domestic fools were clothed in a coat of calf'sskin. "Calf" in Shakespeare often means "fool."

129. recreant] cowardly. See note on "recreant" and "miscreant" in Arden edition of Richard II.

Do in his name religiously demand 140
 Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
 So wilfully dost spurn; and force perforce
 Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
 Of Canterbury, from that holy see:
 This, in our foresaid holy father's name, 145
 Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthy name to interrogatories
 Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
 Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
 So slight, unworthy and ridiculous, 150
 To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
 Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England
 Add thus much more, that no Italian priest
 Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
 But as we, under heaven, are supreme head, 155
 So under Him that great supremacy,
 Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
 Without the assistance of a mortal hand:
 So tell the pope, all reverence set apart
 To him and his usurp'd authority. 160

144. see] F 4; Sea Ff 1, 2, 3.
taste Ff 3, 4; tax Rowe (ed. 2).

148. task] Theobald; tast Ff 1, 2;

140. religiously] solemnly, or perhaps, in the name of religion.

142. force perforce] by violent means if necessary, by compulsion. Compare 2 Henry VI. i. i. 258: "And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown."

147. What earthy name, etc.] John here poses as the defender of the Constitution against the Church. See Introduction.

147. interrogatories] A technical term for questions which a witness was bound to answer faithfully. "A question in legal examinations" (Coles' Dict.). John asks "whose name can sanction questions put to a sacred king?"

154. tithe or toll] Used as verbs = to exact tithe or toll.

155. heaven] Here must be equivalent to God; see "Him" next line. Collier suggests reading "God."

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blasphem^e in this.

K. John. Though you and all the kings of Christendom
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out;
And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, 165
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that sale sells pardon from himself,
Though you and all the rest so grossly led
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone do me oppose 170
Against the pope and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand cursed and excommunicate:
And blessed shall be he that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic; 175
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonised and worshipp'd as a saint,

164. Dreading . . . out] Compare Chaucer's Prologue to Canterbury Tales, lines 654-60:—

"He wolde techen him to have non awe,

In swich cas, of the erchedeknes curs,

But-if a mannes soule were in his purs.

For in his purs he sholde y-punished be.

'Purs is the erchedeknes helle,' seyde he."

165. vile] Nearly always spelt "vilde" or "vild" in plays of this period.

168, 169. Though you . . . cherish] Though you and all the rest who are so foolishly led, help to keep up this juggling witchcraft (i.e. Popery) by contributing monies towards it.

173. excommunicate] excommunicated. English words from a Latin past participle in -atus are often used without the -ed in the past.

177. Canonised . . . saint] Seymour would read "Worshipp'd and canonised as a saint." But we may read "canónised and worshipp'd as a saint," which is the accentuation in Hamlet, i. iv. 47:—

"But tell

Why thy canónis'd bones hearséd in death."

Compare also Troilus and Cressida, ii. ii. 202:—

"And fame in time to come canónise us";

and iii. iv. 52 infra, where Seymour again would needlessly invert the line for the same reason.

That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const.

O, lawful let it be

That I have room with Rome to curse awhile! 180

Good father cardinal, cry thou amen

To my keen curses; for without my wrong

There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too: when law can do no right, 185

Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong:

Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,

For he that holds his kingdom holds the law;

Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,

How can the law forbid my tongue to curse? 190

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,

Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;

And raise the power of France upon his head,

Unless he do submit himself to Rome. 194

Eli. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil; lest that France repent,

And by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

185. right,] right. Ff.

196. that, devil ;] Pope; that devil ; Ff.

180. room . . . Rome] It seems evident that here "room" and "Rome" were to be pronounced alike. That "Rome" was pronounced "room" is shown by rhymes in Lucrece, 715 and 717, 1644 and 1645. Compare also Julius Cæsar, i. ii. 156: "Now is it Rome indeed and room enough."

185. when law can do no right, etc.] when the law cannot see people righted then let no wrongdoing at all be hindered. Law cannot give Arthur his kingdom, for John is master of the law; therefore since the law itself is "perfect wrong," how can I be rightfully restrained from cursing. This mixture of quibbling with passionate argument is characteristic of this play.

193. raise the power . . . head] lead the French forces against him.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs, 200 Because—

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Bethink you, father; for the difference

Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome, 205

Or the light loss of England for a friend:

Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee here
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride.

Blanch. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need. 211

207. That's] That's Ff 1; That is Ff 2, 3, 4

199. And hang . . . recreant limbs] The Bastard takes little interest in the wrongs of either party. He seems only too delighted that mischief is afoot and takes the opportunity to worry Austria.

203. What . . . cardinal?] What should he say, except what the Cardinal has already said?

207. the curse of Rome] To Blanch the curse of Rome would be the lesser of two evils, for if John and Philip fell out she would have to oppose her friends to her husband and his friends. This course she has to take ultimately.

209. new untrimmed] "Trim" in Elizabethan English means gaily decked. Compare the use as a verb in Romeo and Juliet, iv. iv. 24: "Go waken Juliet, go and trim her up." Taking the passage as it stands, we may explain it by supposing Constance to mean that Blanch was a new-made bride having just laid aside the trimmings in which she had been married. Schmidt drew attention in this connection to Sonnet xviii. :—

"And every fair from fair sometimes declines,
By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed."

White says "untrimmed = in deshabille," which is hardly likely, even though the marriage was suddenly clapped up. Others see an allusion to the bride's going to church with her hair dishevelled. Compare Webster, Vittoria Corombona (ed. Dyce, p. 27, col. 1): "Let them dangle loose as a bride's hair." The emendations are "new and trimmed" (Theobald, who also conjectured "new untamed" or "new be-trimmed"), "new uptrimmed" (Dyce), "new entrimmed" (Richardson conj.), "new untamed" (Vaughan, agreeing with Theobald's conj.), "new-intervened" (Herr conj.).

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need. 214
O then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down!

K. John. The king is moved, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be removed from him, and answer well!

Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet lout. 220

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.

Pand. What canst thou say but will perplex thee more,
If thou stand excommunicate and cursed?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow yourself. 225
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words 230
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love
Between our kingdoms and our royal selves,
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands
To clap this royal bargain up of peace, 235

233. but new before,] but new—before— Seymour conj.

227. And the conjunction, etc.] There is a looseness of construction in this sentence, for, although "conjunction" is the subject of "(is) married," "(is) coupled," and "(is) linked," these participles agree in meaning with "inward souls."

233. but new before] only just before.

235. clap . . . up] A bargain or a wager was sealed by a handshake. There are numerous instances in plays of the period. Compare Gosson's To the Gentlemen of London (ed.

Heaven knows, they were besmear'd and overstain'd
 With slaughter's pencil, where revenge did paint
 The fearful difference of ^{angry} incensed kings:
 And shall these hands, so lately purged of blood,
 So newly join'd in love, so strong in both, 240
 Unyoke this seizure and this kind regret?
 Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
 Make such inconstant children of ourselves,
 As now again to snatch our palm from palm,
 Unswear faith sworn, and on the marriage-bed 245
 Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
 And make a riot on the gentle brow
 Of true sincerity? O, holy sîr,
 My reverend father, let it not be so!
 Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose 250
 Some gentle order; and then we shall be blest
 To do your pleasure and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
 Save what is opposite to England's love.
 Therefore to arms! be champion of our church, 255
 Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
 A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
 France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,

Arber, p. 59): "and the match (is) made, ere you strike hands"; and Middleton, A Trick, iii. 1 (Mermaid ed. p. 39): "Come, clap hands, a match."

240. so strong in both] i.e. hands strong in fight and strong in friendship.

241. regreet] greeting once again, therefore re-agreement, not merely greeting or salutation as most editors give. Compare Richard II. i. iii. 142: "Shall not regret our fair dominions."

242. Play fast and loose] Originally to play at a cheating game in which the gull had no chance (see Appendix); then to deal dishonourably.

253, 254. All form . . . England's love] Everything is null and void except what is directly opposed to love towards England.

A chafed lion by the mortal paw,
 A fasting tiger safer by the tooth, 260
 Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So makest thou faith an enemy to faith;

And like a civil war set'st oath to oath,
 Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow 265
 First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd,
 That is, to be the champion of our church.

What since thou sworest is sworn against thyself

And may not be performed by thyself,

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss 270

Is not amiss when it is truly done,

And being not done, where doing tends to ill,

The truth is then most done not doing it:

The better act of purposes mistook

Is to mistake again; though indirect, 275

259. chafed] So Theobald; cased Ff.

259. chafed] None of the suggested meanings for the "cased" of the Folios seems satisfactory. Mr. Moore-Smith says "the point of the epithet would seem to be that if the lion were shut in, the man would be shut in also, and so much more courage would be required." I fail to see why the man should be supposed to be shut in. Henry VIII. III. ii. 206, 207, supports Theobald:—

"so looks the chafed lion

Upon the daring huntsman who has gall'd him."

There is something to be said for Pope's reading, "chased," which would hold also in the Henry VIII. passage. A lion that had been hunted and, so to speak, driven to bay, would not be a pleasant creature to take by the paw. If we read "chafed," we must of course assume it to mean "enraged."

268. What since thou sworest, etc.]" "What you have sworn since then is sworn against yourself and cannot be performed by you, for what wrong you have sworn to do is not wrong if truly performed, and if you do it not, because the doing of it would be wrong, then you are most truly performing it by not doing it." An excellent bit of sophistry, quite in the early Shakespearian vein.

275-278. though indirect . . . new-burn'd] though in not keeping your vow you are turning from the straight, yet since you are already on the wrong path this very turning will bring you back to the right path.

Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
 And falsehood falsehood cures, as fire cools fire
 Within the scorched veins of one new-burn'd.
 It is religion that doth make vows kept;
 But thou hast sworn against religion, 280
 By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st,
 And makest an oath the surety for thy truth
 Against an oath: the truth thou art unsure
 To swear, swears only not to be forsworn;
 Else what a mockery should it be to swear! 285
 But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
 And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
 Therefore thy later vows against thy first
 Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
 And better conquest never canst thou make 290

278. scorched] Ff 1, 2; scorching Ff 3, 4. 282, 283. truth . . . truth]
 Subst. as Johnson (Heath conj.); truth, Against an oath the truth, Ff 1, 2; truth: Against an oath the truth, Ff 3, 4. 288. later] Ff 1, 2; latter Ff 3, 4.

Compare The Merchant of Venice, iv. i. 216: "To do a great right, do a little wrong."

281. By what thou swear'st, etc.] Mr. Wright says that the language is made intentionally obscure. Although this passage is undoubtedly obscure, I cannot admit that Shakespeare ever deliberately made a serious character speak obscurely. Besides, the general argument here is plain enough—Of two oaths the greater, that taken to God and the Church, absolves Philip from the consequences of breaking a lesser, that plighted to John, if the lesser oath is contrary to the first. Most editors and critics have attempted to better the passage, but the alterations seem so violent that, as Mr. Wright says about Staunton and Hudson's readings, they may give a meaning which Shakespeare never intended. Lines 280, 281 are awkward, but can be taken to mean—"You have sworn against religion by calling in religion to witness an oath which will do her harm." "the truth . . . forsworn" is the phrase that offers most difficulty. It yields sense by supposing it to be a slight digression from the main argument, meaning—"and when you are asked to take an oath of which you are not sure of the consequences (such as, Pandulph would imply, the oath you took with John), you only swear not to be forsworn, i.e. on condition that it is not contrary to some greater oath."

289. Is] Sometimes explained as agreeing in number with rebellion and not with vows. See note on ll. 168-169 supra.

Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
 Against these giddy loose suggestions:
 Upon which better part our prayers come in,
 If thou vouchsafe them. But if not, then know
 The peril of our curses light on thee 295
 So heavy as thou shalt not shake them off,
 But in despair die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will't not be?

Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding-day? 300

Against the blood 'that thou hast married?
 What, shall our feast be kept with slaughtered men?
 Shall braying trumpets and loud churlish drums,
 Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?
 O husband, hear me! ay, alack, how new 305
 Is husband in my mouth! even for that name,
 Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
 Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
 Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee,
 Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee, 310
 Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
 Forethought by heaven!

305. ay.] Ff; ah! Theobald. 309-312. Against . . . heaven!] Pope's arrangement; Folios end the lines kneeling . . . Dauphin . . . heaven.

295. peril . . . light] Note confusion of number; peril grammatical subj. to light, but them showing that curses was treated as subj. in meaning.

303. churlish] This expressive epithet was applied to the drum once before (see II. i. 76 supra).

304. measures] The accompanying music to our wedding festivities.

312. Forethought] Foreseen, and therefore, since "foreseen by heaven,"

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love: what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds, 315
His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!

Lew. I muse your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you on.

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need. England, I will fall from thee, 320

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty!

Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton Time,
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue. 325

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: fair day, adieu!
Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,

foreordained. Compare Cymbeline,
III. iv. 171:—

"Fore-thinking this, I have already fit—

"Tis in my cloak bag—doublet, hat, hose . . ."

Cotgrave has "premedité: premeditated, forethought of."

317. I muse] I marvel. Compare
Two Gentlemen of Verona, I. iii. 64:
"Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed."

318. respects] considerations. See
Hamlet, III. i. 68:—

"There's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life";

and compare v. iv. 41 infra.

319. denounce] merely equivalent to our "proclaim," or "pronounce";

it contains of course no idea of impeachment or accusation.

320. fall from thee] leave your party. Mr. Wright quotes Heywood
2 Edward IV. i. 6:—

"If he will recant

And fall from Lewis again."

See also III. i. 127 supra.

322. French inconstancy] Compare a curious passage in Gosson's Schools of Abuse (ed. Arber, p. 34): "We have robbed Greece of gluttonie, Italy of wantonnesse, Spaine of pride, Fraunce of deceite, and Dutchland of quaffing."

324, 325. Old Time . . . shall rue]
The Bastard remarks after John's threat, "If it's merely a matter of time France shall rue." This lacks the usual salt of the Bastard's speeches, and the text has been suspected.

They whirl asunder and dismember me. 330

Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win ;

Uncle, I needs must pray that thou mayst lose ;

Father, I may not wish the fortune thine ;

Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive :

Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose ; 335

Assured loss before the match be play'd.

Lew. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.

[Exit Bastard.

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath ; 340

A rage whose heat hath this condition,

That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,

The blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire : 345

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threatens. To arms let's hie!

[Exeunt.

337. lies] lives Capell. 341. this] a Vaughan conj. 342. allay] alloy't Dyce (ed. 2) (Capell conj.).

339. Cousin] Loosely used for kinsman in Elizabethan English. Cotgrave has "Cousin : a cosin or kinsman."

339. puissance] powers, forces. Sometimes a dissyllable, here a trisyllable.

343. The blood . . . blood] The repetition of the word "blood" has led to emendation. Hudson prints, after a suggestion of Sidney Walker's, "The best and dearest valued blood." Hudson also suggests "The blood, the dearest-valued blood." Bulloch conjectures "the dearest-valued blue." The text, however, is defensible. John says nothing can allay his rage but blood; he is going to state that it must be French blood, and when half-way through the sentence, he sees a method of heightening the effect and interjects "and (that the) dearest-valued blood."

346. jeopardy] danger, hazard. Mr. Wright derives this from jeu parti, a game where the risk is evenly divided.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums, excursions. Enter the BASTARD, with AUSTRIA'S head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;
Some airy devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Austria's head lie there,
While Philip breathes.

Enter KING JOHN, ARTHUR, and HUBERT.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy. Philip, make up: 5
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescued her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not:
But on, my liege; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end. 10

[Exeunt.

2. airy] fiery Theobald (Warburton).

7. ta'en] Rowe; tane Ff.

2. airy] belonging to the air, aerial. Compare the old list of dramatis personæ in The Tempest: "Ariel, an ayrie Spirit"; also Webster, The Devil's Law Case, v. 5 (ed. Dyce, p. 143): "The devil that rules in the air hangs in their light." This line also occurs in the Duchess of Malfi, II. i. (Dyce, p. 67). Spirits were divided into four classes inhabiting respectively the four elements, air, fire, earth and water.

5. Hubert . . . make up] Editors have been unwilling to let this line remain defective. Pope reads

"There, Hubert"; Keightley, "Here, Hubert"; Fleay, "Good Hubert." Rann, after a conjecture of Tyrwhitt's, inserts "thou" after "keep." Theobald reads "Richard" and Hanmer "Cousin" for "Philip." It would be equally natural for King John and for Shakespeare to forget the Bastard's change of name.

5. make up] move onward. Compare 1 Henry IV. v. iv. 4, 5:—

"I do beseech your majesty, make up,
Lest your retirement do amaze your friends."

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums, excursions, retreat. Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, ARTHUR, the BASTARD, HUBERT, and Lords.

K. John. [To Elinor.] So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind

So strongly guarded. [To Arthur.] Cousin, look not sad :

Thy grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will *
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O, this will make my mother die with grief! 5

K. John. [To the Bastard.] Cousin, away for England! haste before:

And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; imprisoned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon: 10
Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver beck me to come on.

I leave your highness. Grandam, I will pray,
If ever I remember to be holy, 15
For your fair safety; so, I kiss your hand.

2. So] Lettsom's conjecture, adopted by Hudson, of "More" for "So" seems very plausible. The printer's error can be explained by his eye having caught the "So" of the previous line—a common failing among printers.

8, 9. imprisoned . . . liberty] The want of rhythm in these lines has led to emendation. Sidney Walker's proposed transposition, printed by Grant White, is the least violent way out of the difficulty, if real difficulty there be. He would read "set at liberty, Imprisoned angels."

12. Bell, book, and candle] The "properties" necessary for the performance of the Catholic curse of excommunication; referred to in Kynge Johan.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.

K. John.

Coz, farewell.

[Exit Bastard.]

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark, a word.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,

We owe thee much! within this wall of flesh 20

There is a soul counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love:

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath

Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say, 25

But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed

To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet, 30

But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,

Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say, but let it go:

The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world, 35

Is all too wanton and too full of gawds

To give me audience: if the midnight bell

Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,

26. time] Pope; tune Ff.

22. advantage] Mr. Wright and Mr. Moore-Smith explain this as "interest." It is true that the line may be paraphrased "I mean to pay back thy love with interest," because our modern phrase "with interest" really means more than mere legally due interest. The word here and in 1 Henry IV. II. iv. 599, "The money shall be paid back with advantage," means something thrown into the bargain, more than one can legally expect. See Cotgrave, "Avantage: . . . an advantage, . . . overplus, addition, eeking."

28. respect] opinion, esteem.

Sound on into the drowsy ear of night;
 If this same were a churchyard where we stand, 40
 And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;
 Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
 Had baked thy blood and made it heavy-thick,
 Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
 Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes 45
 And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
 A passion hateful to my purposes:
 Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
 Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
 Without a tongue, using conceit alone, 50
 Without eyes, ears and harmful sound of words;
 Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,

43. heavy-thick] Pope; heavy, thick Ff.
 conj.; tingling Collier MS.

44. tickling] trickling Grey

39. ear] So printed by Dyce and Staunton after conjectures of Collier and Sidney Walker. The Folios have "race," which is therefore supposed to have been a misprint for "eare." For "on" Theobald printed "one." But as Vaughan pointed out the midnight bell does not sound one! Delius conjectured "on!" Wetherell "not" and Bulloch "dong." Other emendations of the line have been proposed, but with the single alteration of "race" to "ear" it gives perfectly good sense.

45. keep] occupy. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iv. iii. 324: "Other slow arts entirely keep the brain." Mr. P. A. Daniel points out that in The Puritan, iii. vi. 592, we find "we'll steep Our eyes in laughter."

50. conceit] in Elizabethan English often means imagination. Compare Richard II. ii. ii. 33: "'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady." Here it has a wider meaning, equivalent to "some intangible power of the mind."

52. brooded] Even though "brooded" be equivalent to "brooding," as Mr. Wright points out, it does not seem an apt epithet for "day" in this connection. Cotgrave gives "Accouvé; brooded; set close on, crouded (crouched?) over; also covered, hidden, overshadowed," thus vouching for the form of the word in -ed, but proving the inapplicability of the meaning. The day cannot be proud, wanton and full of gawds, attended with the pleasures of the world, watchful and at the same time brooded. Pope reads "broad-ey'd," Collier MS. "the broad," Delius after a conj. of Mason's, "brooded-watchful." An anonymous conj. in Halliwell suggests "broody," while Vaughan has withdrawn his suggestion of "bruided." Perhaps the Delius-Mason reading is the least objectionable, taking "brooded" to be an epithet applied to watchful, the day being as watchful as a sitting bird; but even this is far from satisfactory.

I would unto thy bosom pour my thoughts:
 But, ah, I will not! yet I love thee well;
 And, by my troth, I think thou lovest me well. 55

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
 Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
 By heaven, I would do it.

K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
 Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
 On yon young boy; I'll tell thee what, my friend, 60
 He is a very serpent in my way;
 And wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread,
 He lies before me: dost thou understand me?
 Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I'll keep him so,
 That he shall not offend your majesty.

K. John. Death. 65

Hub. My Lord?

K. John. A grave.

Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough.

I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
 Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
 Remember. Madam, fare you well:
 I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty. 70

Eli. My blessing go with thee!

K. John. For England, cousin, go:
 Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
 With all true duty. On toward Calais, ho!

[Exeunt.]

66. My lord?] Rowe; My lord. Ff. 72. attend] Ff 1, 2; to attend
 Ff 3, 4; t' attend Pope.

SCENE IV.—The same. The French King's tent.

Enter KING PHILIP, LEWIS, PANDULPH, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scattered and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill? 5
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
O'erbearing interruption, spite of France?

Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified: 10
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard
Of any kindred action like to this?

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise 15
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Pandulph] Pandulpho F 1; Pandulpho Ff 2, 3, 4. 14. kindred action hyphenated in Ff.

2. armado] From the Spanish armada, a fleet of armed ships.

2. convicted] Mr. Wright takes this to mean "beaten, discomfited,"
for which Malone gives the authority of Florio's World of Words. The
New Eng. Dict. quotes Lloid's
Pilgrimage of Princes (1607), ii.:
"(Hippolita) being convicted by Theseus . . . was married to him."
This meaning gives quite good sense—A discomfited fleet has been scattered by a storm—and disposes of the various suggested emendations.

Mr. Wright sees in the phrase a reference to the defeat of the Spanish
Armada. Delius reads "connected."

12. cause] Theobald made a tempting suggestion of course, which Hanmer has printed.

16. So we could . . . our shame
If we could find some example of others put to such shame as we have been.

Enter CONSTANCE.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
 Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
 In the vile prison of afflicted breath.

I prithee, lady, go away with me. 20

Const. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace.

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,

But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
 Death, death; O amiable lovely death! 25

Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!
 Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,

Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
 And I will kiss thy detestable bones
 And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty brows 30

And ring these fingers with thy household worms
 And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust
 And be a carrion monster like thyself:

24, 25. redress, Death, death;] Theobald; redresse: Death, death, Ff; redress, Death; death, Pope.

19. the vile prison . . . breath] The body is often looked upon as a vile prison for the purer spirit or breath (anima) which is afflicted by being kept prisoner within the body. One is reminded of Browning's Karshish:—

"This man's flesh he hath admirably made,
 Blown like a bubble, kneaded like a paste,
 To coop up and keep down on earth a space
 That puff of vapour from his mouth, man's soul."

23. defy] renounce. Compare I Henry IV. i. iii. 228: "All studies here I solemnly defy."

26. Thou . . . rottenness!] The man who could pen certain passages in the Dunciad rejected this line!

27. Arise forth] The inversion "from forth" of the Collier MS. betters the line in rhythm and gives a more natural order of words than "Arise forth."

28. Thou hate . . . prosperity] Thou who art hated and feared by the prosperous.

29-36. And I will kiss, etc.] Constance compares death to a skeleton and goes into grim detail.

32. fulsome] nauseous. See Cotgrave, "Nideur: the stench, or fulsom savour of things broiled or burnt."

Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smilest,
 And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love, 35
 O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace!

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:

O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
 Then with a passion would I shake the world;
 And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy 40
 Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
 Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;

I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine; 45
 My name is Constance; I was Geffrey's wife;
 Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
 I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
 For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:
 O, if I could, what grief should I forget! 50

39. would I] F 1; I would Ff 2, 3, 4. 44. not holy] F 4; holy Ff 1, 2, 3.

35. buss] to kiss wantonly. The older form was "bass." The same distinction holds between "kissing" and "bussing" as between modern French embraser and baiser.

36. affliction] afflicted one. The abstract for concrete.

40. anatomy] skeleton. So Comedy of Errors, v. i. 237-238:—

"a hungry lean-faced villain,
 A mere anatomy."

Compare Cotgrave, "Scelete: the whole coagmentation of bones in their natural position; also an anatomy made thereof"; and Reginald Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, 1584 (Nicholson, p. 36): "as bare and naked as an anatomie."

42. modern] trite, commonplace. Compare All's Well that Ends Well, II. iii. 2: "To make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless"; also As You Like It, II. vii. 156: "Full of wise saws and modern instances." Rowe, Knight and Collier MS. emend needlessly. See Prof. Case's note in Antony and Cleopatra (Arden Shakespeare).

44. not holy] This emendation by the fourth Folio is perhaps not so good as the "unholy" conjectured by Steevens, and adopted by Delius and Staunton; but it has the Folio authority.

Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
 And thou shalt be canonized, cardinal;
 For, being not mad but sensible of grief,
 My reasonable part produces reason
 How I may be deliver'd of these woes, 55
 And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
 If I were mad, I should forget my son,
 Or madly think a babe of clouts were he:
 I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
 The different plague of each calamity. 60

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. O, what love I note
 In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
 Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
 Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends
 Do glue themselves in sociable grief, 65
 Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
 Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?
 I tore them from their bonds and cried aloud, 70
 "O that these hands could so redeem my son,
 As they have given these hairs their liberty!"
 But now I envy at their liberty,
 And will again commit them to their bonds,
 Because my poor child is a prisoner. 75

52. canonised] pronounced canón-iz'd. See III. i. 177 supra.

58. babe of clouts] rag doll.

64. friends] Rowe's reading. The Folios have "fiends"—a queer error.

68. To England] Constance's reply to Philip's invitation, line 20. Mr.

Wright suggests that lines 21-67 may have been added to the original draft of the play. His alternative suggestion that Constance is sinking into apathy after her first outburst is not convincing, because, in the next line, she resumes her lamentations.

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say
 That we shall see and know our friends in heaven :
 If that be true, I shall see my boy again ;
 For since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
 To him that did but yesterday suspire, 80
 There was not such a gracious creature born.
 But now will canker sorrow eat my bud
 And chase the native beauty from his cheek
 And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
 As dim and meagre as an ague's fit, 85
 And so he'll die ; and, rising so again,
 When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
 I shall not know him : therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief. 90

Const. He talks to me that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
 Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
 Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words, 95
 Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
 Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form ;

78. If that . . . boy again] The slight irregularity of this line has led to its being suspected, and its contradiction of lines 88, 89 appears to confirm the suspicion. Pope omits "true," Vaughan omits "see," Fleay, following Sidney Walker's conjecture, prints "shall," while Seymour conjectures "I'll." All these merely set the rhythm right. Kinnear conjectures "If that be true, then never shall I see my boy again." But this is not warranted by the real meaning of the speech. Constance first takes comfort from the thought that she will see and know her son in heaven. But then comes the thought "sorrow will so alter him that I may meet him in the court of heaven and not know him, therefore I shall never see him more."

90. You hold . . . of grief] You look upon your grief too hatefully.

92. You are as fond . . . child] One may suspect a play upon "fond" here. You are as fond of (or you as foolish owing to) grief as you are fond of your child. Constance, of course, only sees one meaning.

Then have I reason to be fond of grief.

Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,

I could give better comfort than you do. 100

I will not keep this form upon my head,

When there is such disorder in my wit.

O Lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!

My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!

My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure! [Exit. 105

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. [Exit.

Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me joy:

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale

Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;

And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,

That it yields nought but shame and bitterness. 111

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,

Even in the instant of repair and health,

The fit is strongest; evils that take leave,

On their departure most of all show evil: 115

What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lew. All days of glory, joy and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly you had.

101. Most editors print a stage-direction here. "Tearing off her Head-cloaths," Pope; "Looses her hair again," Dent MS.; "Tearing her hair" Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.). It is evident that Constance does again fall to tearing her hair, and we must understand "form" as merely order or arrangement in opposition to "disorder" in the next line without going into the concrete "Head-cloaths" of Pope.

107. joy] rejoice. So Much Ado About Nothing, I. i. 28: "How much better it is to weep at joy than to joy at weeping!"

110. world's] Pope's almost certain emendation of the "words" of the Folios. Delius suggests a meaning by allowing "word's" to refer to life, and reading "that sweet word's taste." Jackson conjectures "word, state."

111. shame] The repetition of "shame" has led Sidney Walker to conjecture "gall" in the second place, while Cartwright suggests "grief." There is no pressing need for this painting of the lily.

118. If you had won it, etc.] Pandulph rises through sophistry into prophecy.

No, no; when fortune means to men most good,
 She looks upon them with a threatening eye. 120
 'Tis strange to think how much King John hath lost

In this which he accounts so clearly won:
 Are not you grieved that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood. 125
 Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit;
 For even the breath of what I mean to speak
 Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
 Out of the path which shall directly lead
 Thy foot to England's throne; and therefore mark.
 John hath seized Arthur; and it cannot be 131
 That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
 The misplaced John should entertain an hour,
 One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest.
 A sceptre snatch'd with an unruly hand 135
 Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd;
 And he that stands upon a slippery place
 Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
 That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;

So be it, for it cannot be but so. 140

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

132. whiles] whilst Rowe. 139. stand, then] stand then, Hanmer.

128. rub] "Any obstruction to the bowl's course from inequalities of the ground or natural obstacles; also used of a running bowl sideling from another" (Encyc. of Sport, i. 129). "Each dust, each straw," is hardly any exaggeration, for a good bowling-green is supposed to be as absolutely true as a billiard-table. Bowls was a favourite Elizabethan game, and from Shakespeare's frequent references to it we may guess that it was a favourite game of his.

Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green you are and fresh in this old world! 145

John lays you plots; the times conspire with you;

For he that steeps his safety in true blood

Shall find but bloody safety and untrue.

This act so evilly born shall cool the hearts

Of all his people and freeze up their zeal, 150

That none so small advantage shall step forth

To check his reign, but they will cherish it;

No natural exhalation in the sky,

No scope of nature, no distemper'd day,

No common wind, no custom'd event, 155

But they will pluck away his natural cause

And call them meteors, prodigies and signs,

Abortives, presages and tongues of heaven,

Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

152. reign] F 4; reigne Ff 1, 2, 3; rein Capell conj.

146. John lays you plots] John lays plots by which you and not he will benefit. Malone conjectures "your plots," where the meaning would necessarily be the same; hence we gain nothing by the alteration.

151, 152. none so small . . . but] no circumstance, however trifling, that may give them any weapon against him will they omit to make the most of.

153. exhalation] meteor. So Julius Cæsar, II. i. 44: "The exhalations whizzing in the air"; and 1 Henry IV. II. iv. 352: "My lord, do you see these meteors? Do you behold these exhalations?" See "meteors," line 157 infra.

154. scope of nature] anything within the range of natural phenomena. Pope reads "scape" as equivalent to "freak," but this is unsupported by any example of the same use in Shakespeare.

157. meteors] supernatural phenomena. See Coles, "Meteors: apparitions on high, or bodies imperfectly mixt of vapours drawn up in the air, as comets, clouds, wind, rain, etc." Evidently in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries "meteors" and "exhalations" were terms loosely used and imperfectly understood.

158. Abortives] We may either take this to mean abortions of nature, or dreadful happenings that would bring about abortion in those witnessing them.

Lew. May be he will not touch young Arthur's life, 160
But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him, 165
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change,
And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John,
Methinks I see this hurly all on foot:
And, O, what better matter breeds for you 170
Than I have named! The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England, ransacking the church,
Offending charity: if but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side, 175
Or as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king: 'tis wonderful

164. that] this F 4.

166-168. And kiss the lips . . . John] Will greet change as a welcome stranger, and find good cause for revolt and wrath in those crimes in which John has dabbled. Compare this unpleasant metaphor with Gammer Gurton's Needle (1563), ed. Gayley, line 153:—

"I picke not this geare, heurst thou, out of my fingers endes;
But he that hard (sic) it told me."

169. hurly] tumult. Compare The Taming of the Shrew, iv. i. 206: "amid this hurly." In Holland's Livy (1600), "hurly" is used to translate the Latin tumultus. The commoner form is "hurly-burly," which is still in use.

173. charity] in the wider sense of "good-will," as in the phrase "Faith, Hope, and Charity."

174. a call] a decoy bird. Compare Lodge's Alarum against Usury: "It is enough for silly birds to be led by the call of the fowler."

175. train] to draw, attract. Fr. trainer. If a dozen French were there they would act as a decoy to entice ten thousand English to their side.

What may be wrought out of their discontent,
Now that their souls are topful of offence. 180

For England go: I will whet on the king.

Lev. Strong reasons make strong actions: let us go:

If you say ay, the king will not say no. [Exeunt.

182. make] Capell; makes Ff. strong] Ff 2, 3, 4; strange F 1.

180. topful] brimful. Compare Macbeth, 1. v. 44: "topfull of direst cruelty."

ACT IV

SCENE I.—A room in a castle.

Enter HUBERT and Executioners.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and look thou stand
Within the arras: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
And bind the boy which you shall find with me
Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch. 5

First Exec. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! fear not you: look to't.

[Exeunt Executioners.]

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

1. thou] you Rowe.

2. arras] tapestry, so called from its having been first manufactured at Arras. It was evidently hung at some distance from the walls, for we often hear of people hiding behind it, as did Polonius in Hamlet.

7. Uncleanly . . . you] The first three Folios read "Uncleanly scruples fear not you"; the fourth Folio inserts a comma after "scruples." The reading in the text is that of Rowe. Mr. Moore-Smith, following Schmidt and the first three Folios, would take the meaning as "Let no unbecoming scruples frighten you," giving "fear" the same meaning as it bears in II. i. 383. This is rather forcing the construction, and Rowe's reading is much to be preferred, especially as the fourth Folio supports it.

8. Young lad] Arthur is not to be classed with the children of Shakespeare—young Macduff, little Edmund of England, little Coriolanus. Shakespeare deliberately calls him a lad, and he is more like the sons of Cymbeline.

Arth. As little prince, having so great a title 10
To be more prince, as may be. You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks no body should be sad but I :

Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night, 15

Only for wantonness. By my christendom,

So I were out of prison and kept sheep,

I should be as merry as the day is long ;

And so I would be here, but that I doubt

My uncle practises more harm to me : 20

He is afraid of me and I of him :

Is it my fault that I was Geffrey's son ?

No, indeed, is't not ; and I would to heaven

I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside.] If I talk to him, with his innocent
prate 25

He will awake my mercy which lies dead :

Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert ? you look pale to-day :

In sooth, I would you were a little sick,

10. As little prince, etc.] Considering my great title, heir to the crown of England, I am at present as little a prince as may be.

16. wantonness] out of mere affectation. It was a fashion of the time to affect melancholy. See Jaques' description of the various kinds of melancholy in As You Like It, iv. i. 10.

16. christendom] christening, baptism, Christianity—therefore "By my christendom" means "By the fact that I am a Christian."

19. doubt] fear.

20. practises] plots. Compare Cotgrave, "manigance : secret practising or packing in a matter."

23. is 't] The Folios are here at cross purposes. Folios 1 and 4 read "is 't," 2 and 3 "it's." Pope reads "it is." Mr. Moore-Smith says that there ought to be no comma after "indeed," in order to explain the inversion "is 't" on the model of the German Gewiss ist es so.

That I might sit all night and watch with you: 30
I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside.] His words do take possession of my bosom.
Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.

[Aside.] How now, foolish rheum!
Turning spiteous torture out of door!

I must be brief, lest resolution drop 35
Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.

Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:

Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will. 40

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkercher about your brows,
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask it you again;
And with my hand at midnight held your head, 45
And like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time,

34. dispiteous] dispitious Ff.
minutes to] Rowe; minutes, to Ff.

35. lest] F 4; least Ff 1, 2, 3. 46.

34. dispiteous] merciless.

38. Too fairly . . . foul effect] Too well written, Hubert, to convey such a horrible meaning. Malone suggests "a fact" for "effect." But compare Hamlet, III. iv. 129:—

"Do not look upon me;
Lest with this piteous action you convert

My stern effects."

42. handkercher] needlessly corrected into "handkerchief" by Rowe. The form "handkercher" still survives in vulgar speech.

46. watchful minutes to the hour] i.e. minutes which watch the hour. A common Elizabethan inversion.

47. Still and anon] Continually, ever and again. For this use of "still" see note on II. i. 522 supra. Compare also Dekker, King's Entertainment (1604), ed. Pearson, 1318: "Envy Saying, "What lack you?" and "Where lies your grief?"

Or "What good love may I perform for you?"

Many a poor man's son would have lien still 50

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;

But you at your sick service had a prince.

Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,

And call it cunning: do, an if you will:

If heaven be pleased that you must use me ill, 55

Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes that never did nor never shall

So much as frown on you.

Hub. I have sworn to do it

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none but in this iron age would do it! 60

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears

And quench his fiery indignation

Even in the matter of mine innocence;

63. his] Capell; this Ff.

... stood ... neere unto Vertue, but making a shew of fearfulness to approach her and the light: yet still and anon casting her eyes sometimes to the one side beneath." Perhaps this phrase has some connection with the curious "still-an-end" of Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. iv. 67. Schmidt calls this latter a corruption of "still and anon."

50. lien] A form of the participle of "lie," which survived right into the nineteenth century (see New Eng. Dict.); now superseded by the form "lain." The first three Folios have "lyen," the fourth "lain." In Pericles, iii. ii. 85, we again read

"lien" ("I heard of an Egyptian That had nine hours lien dead").

52. at your sick service] An abbreviation for "at your service when you were sick." Compare "true defence" in iv. iii. 84 infra. Perhaps we ought to read "sick-service" (service to a sick man in his bed-chamber).

57. nor] Pope reads "and," for, by his time, the double negative had become incorrect.

61. heat] heated. Shakespeare often used abbreviated past participles in "t" in this way.

64. the matter of mine innocence] Let us hope that Shakespeare here

Nay, after that, consume away in rust, 65

But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

An if an angel should have come to me

And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believed him,—no tongue but Hubert's. 70

Hub. Come forth.

[Stamps.

Re-enter Executioners, with a cord, irons, etc.

Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here. 75

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boisterous-rough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For heaven sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert, drive these men away,

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb; 80

67. stubborn-hard] first hyphened by Theobald (1740) (ed. 2). 71
Stamps] omitted Ft. 76. boisterous-rough] hyphened by Theobald.

meant "the substance which betokens my innocence (the water of my tears)" (Moore-Smith), rather than the "secretion," "exudation," of Schmidt. But compare iv. ii. 79-81 infra.

70. I would . . . Hubert's] This line, with the exception of the substitution of a comma and a dash for the colon after "him" is the reading of the Folios, and gives excellent sense if we will only be good enough to allow Shakespeare to use an ellipsis. "I would not have believed him,—(I will believe) no tongue but Hubert's." There are many emendations.

73. O, save me, Hubert, etc.] To attempt to regularise this line is to spoil it.

77. stone-still] Common in Elizabethan English, and found more than once in Chaucer. Compare Florio's Montaigne (ed. Waller, p. 12): "She stood afraid, stonestill at the strange sight"; and Lucrece 1730: "Stone still, astonished with this deadly deed."

78. heaven sake] Another instance of the omission of the mark of the possessive when clashing with another sibilant. Compare "Alcides shows," II. i. 144 supra.

80. quiet as a lamb] Proverbial; found in Heywood's Proverbs (1546).

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
 Nor look upon the iron angrily:
 Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
 Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him. 85

First Exec. I am best pleased to be from such a deed.

[Exeunt Executioners.]

Arth. Alas, I then have chid away my friend!

He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:

Let him come back, that his compassion may

Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself. 90

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven, that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,

Any annoyance in that precious sense!

Then, feeling what small things are boisterous there, 95

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

81. wince] The first Folio reads winch, evidently a form of "wince." All the Quartos and Folios of Hamlet, except the 1603 Quarto, print III. ii. 252 as "Let the galled jade winch."

85. let me alone with him] trust me to deal with him. So Twelfth Night, II. iii. 145: "For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him." Compare also Twelfth Night, III. iv. 201: "Let me alone for swearing"; and Middleton, A Trick, I. 1 (Mermaid ed. p. 8): "if his nephew be poor indeed he lets God alone with him."

91. None, but to lose your eyes] This answer seems to imply that losing the eyes was a remedy. We may construe "remedy" as alternative, and then we have to ask alternative to what? Vaughan omits "to," and explains "None, but lose your eyes" as "no remedy against losing your eyes." Perhaps Hubert is thinking of John's command to put Arthur to death, and this putting out of the eyes is a remedy against that: but see note on I. 122 infra.

92. mote] So Steevens (1793), after Long MS. and a conjecture of Upton's. The folios have moth, and mote and moth are the same words.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
 Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
 Let me not hold my tongue, let me not, Hubert; 100
 Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
 So I may keep mine eyes: O, spare mine eyes,
 Though to no use but still to look on you!
 Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold
 And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy. 105

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
 Being create for comfort, to be used
 In undeserved extremes: see else yourself;
 There is no malice in this burning coal;
 The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out 110
 And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. An if you do, you will but make it blush
 And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
 Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes; 115
 And like a dog that is compell'd to fight,

101. will, cut] Rowe; will cut Ff.

98, 99. the utterance of a brace of tongues, etc.] Two tongues would be unable to plead sufficiently for two eyes. Vaughan's inversion of "the pleading for a pair of eyes Must needs want utterance of a brace of tongues" is unnecessary if we give "want" its proper force of "fall short in," as in iv. iii. 138 infra: "Let hell want pains enough to torture me."

106-108. No, in good sooth . . . extremes] No, in truth; the fire is dead with grief (for it was created for our comfort) at being wrongly used for cruel purposes. Create = created. Compare heat = heated, line 61 supra.

109. in this burning coal] Hudson, upon a conjecture of Grey's, prints "burning in this coal," a most logical and practical emendation, for there would be malice in a burning coal. The next few lines however rather take away the point of the new reading, for it becomes evident that the coal was still alight although covered with ashes, and could be revived by blowing upon it.

Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.
 All things that you should use to do me wrong
 Deny their office: only you do lack
 That mercy which fierce fire and iron extends, 120
 Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eye
 For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
 Yet am I sworn and I did purpose, boy,
 With this same very iron to burn them out. 125

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this while
 You were disguised.

Hub. Peace; no more. Adieu.
 Your uncle must not know but you are dead;
 I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports:

122. eye] Ff; eyes Steevens (1793) (Capell conj.).

117. Snatch] Snap, bite.

117. tarre] urge. Mid. Eng. terren, or terien, to incite. Compare Hamlet, II. ii. 370: "The nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversy." The word still exists in dialect (see Eng. Dialect Dict.). Halliwell's Dict. quotes Wilbraham (p. 112) under Tarr-on: "To excite to anger or violence; is still used in Cheshire. It is a good old word, used by Wicliffe in his Path Waye to Perfect Knowledge; and also in a MS. translation of the Psalms by Wicliffe, penes me: 'They have terrid thee to ire.'"

119-121. only you do lack . . . mercy-lacking uses] you alone lack that mercy which even fire and iron exhibit,—fire and iron, things notably used in affairs where no mercy is required. The number of the verb "extends" may be explained by supposing that fire and iron really conveyed but one idea to the mind.

122. see to live] Elze (Athen. 1867) conjectures either "live to see" or

"live and see." Roderick conjectures "see and live." The meaning is evidently "live and keep thy sight"; but I cannot help thinking that here we have another clue to the thoughts of Hubert as in line 91 note, supra. He has promised John that Arthur shall not "live," and continually has the death of Arthur in his mind. In putting out Arthur's eyes it seems to me that he originally intended to kill the prince, and that in the phrase "see to live" we have an admission of that. What would make Hubert choose the peculiar punishment of putting out Arthur's eyes when he had promised the king to kill him, unless, in so doing, he meant to kill?

122. touch] injure. Connected with Scan. tac, a wound [?] (Skeat). Compare Cymbeline, v. iii. 10: "Some mortally, some slightly touched"; also the modern "touchy."

123. owes] See II. i. 109, 248 supra and IV. ii. 99 infra.

And, pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure, 130
 That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
 Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven! I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: go closely in with me:

Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—King John's Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and other Lords.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,
 And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This "once again," but that your highness pleased,
 Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
 And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off, 5
 The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
 Fresh expectation troubled not the land
 With any long'd-for change or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
 To guard a title that was rich before, 10
 To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
 To throw a perfume on the violet,
 To smooth the ice, or add another hue

1. again . . .] Ff 3, 4; against crown'd Ff 1, 2.

130. doubtless and secure] without lectures "to," for we may take doubt and without care. See supra, "better state" as alternative with 11. i. 27, 374. "change," while "long'd-for" qualifies both.

133. closely] secretly. Compare Hamlet, III. i. 29: "We have closely sent for Hamlet hither." 10. guard] to ornament, to put facings on. Compare The Merchant of Venice, II. ii. 164: "a livery more guarded than his fellows"; also the modern "watch-guard."

Scene II.

8. or] Vaughan needlessly con-

Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish, 15
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And in the last repeating troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable. 20

Sal. In this the antique and well noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured ;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles and frights consideration, 25
Makes sound opinion sick and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness ;
And oftentimes excusing of a fault 30
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse,
As patches set upon a little breach
Discredit more in hiding of the fault
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

21. antique] Pope ; Anticke, Ff 1, 2 ; Antick, Ff 3, 4.

18, 19. This act . . . troublesome] Exactly the same simile has been used by the Dauphin in III. iv. 108.

24. to fetch about] to take a circuitous course.

27. so new a fashion'd robe] a robe of so new a fashion, "so new a fashion'd" being treated like a big compound adjective.

28. to do better] Staunton would read to better do, much improving the rhythm, but committing the unpardonable sin of splitting the infinitive!

29. They do confound . . . covetousness] They spoil everything by aiming at too much—a case of vaulting ambition o'erleaping itself and falling on the other. Compare v. vii. 20 infra. There is no need to read "curiousness" for "covetousness," as Daniel would, as this does not improve the meaning, while scanning "cov'tousness" makes Capell's conjecture of "covetize" needless.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new crown'd, 35
 We breathed our counsel: but it pleased your highness
 To overbear it, and we are all well pleased,
 Since all and every part of what we would Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation 40
 I have possess'd you with and think them strong;
 And more, more strong, then lesser is my fear,
 I shall indue you with: meantime but ask
 What you would have reform'd that is not well,
 And well shall you perceive how willingly 45
 I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these,
 To sound the purposes of all their hearts,
 Both for myself and them, but, chief of all,
 Your safety, for the which myself and them 50
 Bend their best studies, heartily request
 The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint

42. then lesser] F 1; then lesse Ff 2, 3, 4.

38, 39. Since all . . . will] Since everything we wish is subservient to your wishes.

42. And more . . . my fear] If we keep the reading of the first Folio, we must take "then" as equivalent to "than," understanding the line to mean "More reasons, more strong in proportion as my fear is less." Although Shakespeare in King John seems to have written several passages where the meaning is not obvious at first glance, he has not set such another puzzle as this. Tyrwhitt's conjecture of "when" for "then," adopted by Steevens, is, as Dr. Herford has said, very plausible, but has the great objection of making John admit that he was in great fear, which is not at all probable. The true reading must be one in which John makes little of his fear; and none of the proposed readings (Collier MS. "thus lessening," Keightley "than lesser, in," Fletcher [N. and Q. 1889] "than lesser, is") make this point.

50. myself and them] This ungrammatical construction may be explained (i.) by supposing that "myself" in suggesting "themselves" attracted "they" into "them"; (ii.) that the printer's eye caught the "myself and them" of the preceding line and repeated it; (iii.) that Shakespeare repeated his own phrase without being sensible of the grammatical error.

Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
 To break into this dangerous argument,—
 If what in rest you have in right you hold, 55
 Why then your fears, which as they say, attend
 The steps of wrong, should move you to mew up
 Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
 With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
 The rich advantage of good exercise. 60
 That the time's enemies may not have this
 To grace occasions, let it be our suit
 That you have bid us ask his liberty;
 Which for our goods we do no further ask
 Than whereupon our weal, on you depending, 65
 Counts it your weal he have his liberty.

Enter HUBERT.

K. John. Let it be so: I do commit his youth
 To your direction. Hubert, what news with you?

[Taking him apart.

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed;
 He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine: 70

55. If what in rest, etc.] This line presents two difficulties; we cannot be sure of the exact meaning of the term "in rest," and the line as a whole is meaningless in view of lines 56-60. "Rest" can have nothing to do with the game of primero, where it stood for the final stake, and it seems best to take it, with Mr. Wright, as meaning "peace, security." To make any meaning out of the whole passage we must either adopt Malone's suggestion of "hold not," or Vaughan's of "unright" for "in right"; line 57 then becomes a statement of the popular point of view and not an indirect question in a state of un-English contortion, as some editors would take it.

59. deny] refuse. Compare Middleton, Michaelmas Term, i. ii. 35: "Deny a satin gown and you dare now."

61, 62. That the time's enemies, etc.] That the enemies of the present state of things may not have this argument to use when opportunity offers, etc.

64. goods] This plural form of the abstract is common in Shakespeare. Compare "faiths," line 6 supra.

The image of a wicked heinous fault
 Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
 Does show the mood of a much troubled breast;
 And I do fearfully believe 'tis done,
 What we so fear'd he had a charge to do. 75

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go
 Between his purpose and his conscience,
 Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
 His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence 80
 The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:
 Good lords, although my will to give is living,
 The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
 He tells us Arthur is deceased to-night. 85

Sal. Indeed we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed we heard how near his death he was,
 Before the child himself felt he was sick:
 This must be answer'd either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me? 90
 Think you I bear the shears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame

73. Does] F 4; Doe F 2; Do Ff 1, 3; Doth Dyce and Staunton.

72. close] secretive, suspiciously reserved. Here the word implies that Hubert looked as if he were hiding a guilty secret. Compare "closely," iv. 1. 133 supra.

77. Between . . . conscience] Between the thoughts of his accomplished design on Arthur's life and his conscience as a murderer.

89. answer'd] atoned for. So Julius Cæsar, iii. ii. 85:—

"If it were so, it was a grievous fault,
 And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it."

93. apparent] plainly evident. The modern word is often used for what appears to be so, but may not be, and probably is not so.

93-95. It is apparent foul-play, etc.] It is manifest foul play, and it is a shame that those in high places should

That greatness should so grossly offer it:

So thrive it in your game! and so, farewell. 95

Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,

And find the inheritance of this poor child,

His little kingdom of a forced grave.

That blood which owed the breadth of all this isle,

Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while! 100

This must not be thus borne: this will break out

To all our sorrows, and ere long I doubt

[Exeunt Lords.]

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent:

There is no sure foundation set on blood,

No certain life achieved by others' death. | 105

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: where is that blood

That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?

So foul a sky clears not without a storm:

Pour down thy weather: how goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England. Never such a power 110

For any foreign preparation

Was levied in the body of a land.

The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;

99. breadth] breath Rowe. 110. England. Never] Johnson (Roderick conj.); England, never Ff.

accomplish things so clumsily. May the rest of your policy thrive in the same manner.

100. bad world the while] it is a bad world when such things happen. See Richard III. iii. vi. 10: "Here's a good world the while!"; and iv. iii. 116 infra.

102. doubt] Compare iv. i. 19 supra.

107. inhabit] intransitive. So commonly in Shakespeare.

109. weather] Here equivalent to bad weather, storm. So The Winter's Tale, iii. iii. 104: "Both roaring louder than the sea or weather."

For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings comes that they are all arrived. 115

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April died 120
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion! 125
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers! What! mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those powers of France
That thou for truth givest out are landed here? 130

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.

Enter the BASTARD and PETER of Pomfret.

Now, what says the world

115. comes] Ff 1, 2, 3; come F 4.
129. came] come Hanmer.

118. could] Ff 1, 2, 3; should F 4.

116, 117. O, where hath our intelligence, etc.] We are reminded of Macbeth, I. vii. 35, 36: "Was the hope drunk wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?"

117. care] It is impossible to say whether the first Folio reads ears or care as the first letter has been broken.

The other three read care. Ear in line 119 does not necessarily show that care was the proper reading, for it may have been suggested by "hear" in line 119.

125. occasion] Perhaps we may best render this by "hour of trial."

To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afeard to hear the worst, 135
Then let the worst unheard fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amazed
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will. 140

Bast. How I have sped among the clergy-men,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams, 145
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes, 150
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him; 155
And on that day at noon, whereon he says

135. afeard] afraid F 4.

137. amazed] bewildered. Compare the Somerset "mazed," which has exactly the same meaning; and see iv. iii. 140 infra, also Troublesome Raigne, p. 16, line 169: "Nor mad, nor masde, but well advised."

139. Aloft] This is the only use of this word by Shakespeare as a preposition.

146. Not knowing . . . full of fear] We have the same idea in Macbeth, iv. ii. 19, 20:—

"And do not know ourselves, when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not what we fear."

I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd.
 Deliver him to safety; and return,
 For I must use thee. [Exit Hubert with Peter.

O my gentle cousin,

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arrived? 160

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:
 Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury,
 With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,
 And others more, going to seek the grave
 Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night 165
 On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
 And thrust thyself into their companies:
 I have a way to win their loves again;
 Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before. 170
 O, let me have no subject enemies,
 When adverse foreigners affright my towns
 With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!
 Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels,
 And fly like thought from them to me again. 175

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. [Exit.

K. John. Spoke like a sprightly noble gentleman.
 Go after him; for he perhaps shall need

165, 166. Of . . . suggestion] Rowe (ed. 2); one line in Ff. 171. subject] F 1; subjects Ff 2, 3, 4.

158. safety] safe custody.

167. companies] See iv. ii. 6 and 64 for "faiths" and "goods," similar abstract plurals.

170. the better foot before] Probably referring to the proverbial expression "the best foot foremost."

177. sprightly] = spiritful = spirited. "Spright" and "spirit" were equivalent in Elizabethan English.

Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit. 180
K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were seen to-night;
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons!

Hub. Old men and beldams in the streets 185
Do prophesy upon it dangerously:
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist, 190
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news; 195
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of a many thousand warlike French

185. beldams] belle dame meant (i.) a grandmother—compare Lucrece, 953, "To show the beldam daughters of her daughter"; (ii.) an aged woman; (iii.) a hag. Here it may be used in sense (ii.) or (iii.).

193. thus] The actor was left to illustrate the word. Compare Julius Cæsar, iv. iii. 26: "For so much trash as may be grasped thus."

198. Had falsely . . . contrary feet] Johnson's curious note that "either shoe will equally admit either foot" would never have been written if he had realised that Shakespeare could not possibly have written this line unless he were used to slippers or shoes which were made in "rights and lefts."

That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent: 200

Another lean unwash'd artificer

Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears!

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?

Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had a mighty cause 205

To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

Hub. No had, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be attended

By slaves that take their humours for a warrant

To break within the bloody house of life, 210

And on the winking of authority

To understand a law, to know the meaning

Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns

More upon humour than advised respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did. 215

K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal

Witness against us to damnation!

210. within] F 1; omitted Ff 2, 3, 4; into Pope.

200. That . . . Kent] Scan "That wére | em-bái- | tail-éd | and ránk'd | in Ként."

200. embattailed] drawn up in battle array.

201. artificer] artisan. The term is still kept in the Navy.

207. No had, my lord] Had not, my lord! This peculiar form of repeating interrogatively a negative assertion was common in Shakespeare's time. Compare Ralph Roister Doister, I. iv. 34: "No is?" and II. iv. 17: "No did?"

207. provokes] incite.

210. To break . . . house of life]

Mr. Wright considers the use of "bloody" here as proleptic—"the house of life which thereby becomes bloody." It may also be taken in the ordinary way, as merely descriptive of the composition of the "house."

211-214. And on the winking of authority, etc.] When one in authority winks to interpret it as a command, to know what a king means in a moment of anger when he frowns capriciously and not as a consequence of deliberation. Some quite unnecessary alterations of this passage have been suggested.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
 Make deeds ill done! Hadst not thou been by, 220
 A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
 Quoted and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
 This murder had not come into my mind:
 But taking note of thy abhorr'd aspect,
 Finding thee fit for bloody villany, 225
 Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger,
 I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
 And thou, to be endeared to a king,
 Made it no conscience to destroy a prince. 230

Hub. My lord,—

230

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head or made a pause
 When I spake darkly what I purposed,
 Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
 As bid me tell my tale in express words,
 Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off, 235
 And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:

229. Made] Mad'st Pope.

220. Make] Plural in number owing to influence of "deeds." It is tempting to read "Make ill deeds done" with Knight, after a conjecture of Capell's. But the Folios are unanimous, and it seems to me that their reading is undoubtedly right, meaning "How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds makes deeds done which it were ill to do"—in fact "ill" is another proleptic adjective. See line 210 supra.

222. Quoted] Specially marked out. See Cotgrave, "Quoté : quoted, marked, noted in the margin"; and "Quote : a quote or quoting, a mark or note upon an article."

226. liable to] capable of. See Julius Caesar, i. ii. 199: "If my name were liable to fear."

227. broke with thee] communicated with thee, mentioned to thee.

233, 234. Or turn'd an eye, etc.] Or hadst thou turned such an eye of doubt upon me as would have bid me tell, etc. John, of course, had told Hubert his tale "in express words."

But thou didst understand me by my signs
 And didst in signs again parley with sin;
 Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
 And consequently thy rude hand to act 240
 The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.
 Out of my sight, and never see me more!
 My nobles leave me; and my state is braved,
 Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
 Nay, in the body of this fleshly land, 245
 This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
 Hostility and civil tumult reigns
 Between my conscience and my cousin's death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
 I'll make a peace between your soul and you. 250
 Young Arthur is alive: this hand of mine
 Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
 Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
 Within this bosom never enter'd yet
 The dreadful motion of a murderous thought; 255
 And you have slander'd nature in my form,
 Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
 Is yet the cover of a fairer mind
 Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers, 260
 Throw this report on their incensed rage,
 And make them tame to their obedience!

240. consequently] referring to order in time = subsequently. Cf. Richard II. i. i. 102, "And consequently, like a traitor coward, Shuic'd out his innocent soul . . ." and note in Arden Edition.

243. my state] my authority as king.

245. Here the Long MS. gives a stage direction, "Laying his hand upon his breast." John is evidently referring to his own body.

247. reigns] Singular number owing to the nominatives both conveying a similar idea, as in iv. i. 120 supra. Hammer corrected it to "reign." But see note on ii. i. 168-169 supra.

255. motion] impulse. Compare i. i. 212 supra.

Forgive the comment that my passion made
 Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
 And foul imaginary eyes of blood 265
 Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
 O, answer not, but to my closet bring
 The angry lords with all expedient haste.
 I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before the castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the walls.

Arth. The wall is high, and yet will I leap down:
 Good ground, be pitiful and hurt me not!
 There's few or none do know me: if they did,
 This ship-boy's semblance hath disguised me quite.
 I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it. 5
 If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
 I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
 As good to die and go, as die and stay. [Leaps down.
 O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:
 Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones! 10 [Dies.

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmundsbury:
 It is our safety, and we must embrace
 This gentle offer of the perilous time.
Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

11. Saint] F 2; S. F 1; St. Ff 3, 4.

265. imaginary] imaginative.

Sal. The Count Melun, a noble lord of France; 15

Whose private with me of the Dauphin's love
Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or rather then set forward; for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or ere we meet. 20

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!
The king by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispossess'd himself of us:
We will not line his thin bestained cloak
With our pure honours, nor attend the foot 25
That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks.
Return and tell him so: we know the worst.

Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

15. Melun] Rowe; Meloone F 1; Melloone Ff 2, 3, 4.

15. Melun] We have here followed the generally accepted modernisation of the spelling. The Folios indicate the pronunciation of the time and the accentuation necessary to make the line scan.

16. private] Here equivalent to private communication either by letter from the Dauphin or in conversation with Melun, more probably the latter. Compare Twelfth Night, III. iv. 100: "Let me enjoy my private: go off." For "with me" Collier substitutes "missive," and Spedding conjectures "witness."

17. Is much more general, etc.] The meaning of "general" here is rather obscure. Hammer cleverly gets over the difficulty by reading "Is much more than these general lines impart." As it stands we must take it to mean that the private communication of the Count was much more comprehensive in its terms than the formal and more guarded letter; a rendering which makes "private" = private conversation, more likely.

21. distemper'd] ill-tempered. Compare Hamlet, III. ii. 312: "The king . . . is in his retirement marvellous distempered."

24. thin bestained] These words are hyphenated in the Folios, and as a consequence we have the following emendations. Singer (ed. 2), following Collier MS., "sin-bestained," Cartwright (conj.) "thick-bestained," Gould (conj.) "kin-bestained." But surely it is better to drop the hyphen and leave the words untouched when they give such an obvious meaning, for the hyphens of the Folios are quite unreliable. "Thin" and "bestained" offer two distinct ideas, and "thin" is absolutely necessary because it carries out the idea of "line."

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; 30

Therefore 'twere reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true, to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison. What is he lies here?

[Seeing Arthur.

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty! 35

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,

Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,

Found it too precious-princely for a grave. 40

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? have you beheld,

Or have you read or heard? or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you see,

That you do see? could thought, without this object,

Form such another? This is the very top, 45

The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,

Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame,

The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,

' That ever wall-eyed wrath or staring rage

Presented to the tears of soft remorse. 50

41. have you beheld] Ff 3, 4; you have beheld Ff 1, 2.

33. man] This is printed mans in some copies of the first Folio, but seems to have been corrected in the press, for Collier says that the Duke of Devonshire's copy reads "man."

49. wall-eyed] having eyes which from some defect appear to stare fiercely. Compare Cotgrave, "Oeil de chevre: a whall, or over-white eye; an eye full of white spots, or whose apple seems divided by a streak of white."

49. staring] In Elizabethan English "staring" meant to glare fiercely. Compare Julius Cæsar, iv. iii. 40: "Shall I be frighted when a mad-man stares?"

Pem. All murders past do stand excused in this :

And this, so sole and so unmatchable,
 Shall give a holiness, a purity,
 To the yet unbegotten sin of times ;
 And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, 55
 Exemplified by this heinous spectacle.

Rast. It is a damned and a bloody work ;
 The graceless action of a heavy hand,
 If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand ! 60

We had a kind of light what would ensue :
 It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand ;
 The practice and the purpose of the king :
 From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
 Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, 65
 And breathing to his breathless excellence
 The incense of a vow, a holy vow,
 Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
 Never to be infected with delight,
 Nor conversant with ease and idleness, 70
 Till I have set a glory to this hand,
 By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. } Our souls religiously confirm thy words.
Big. }

60. hand !] hand ? Ff.

54. times] i.e. times to come, future ages. Compare Lucrece, 717 :—
 "For now against himself he sounds this doom,
 That through the length of times
 he stands disgraced."

62, 63. It is the shameful, etc.]
 Hubert's hand did the deed to suit the king's plots and purposes.

67. The incense of a vow, etc.] By reading "head" for "hand" in line 71, Pope manufactured what Staunton called a more elegant sense. What happens is that Salisbury raises his own hand to Heaven as he makes his vow in the customary manner. There is no reason for taking the hand of the dead prince as Mason suggests.

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you. 75

Sal. O, he is bold and blushes not at death.

Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

[Drawing his sword.]

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin. 80

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours:

I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,

Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget 85

Your worth, your greatness and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! darest thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend

My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so; 90

Yet I am none: whose tongue so'er speaks false,

'Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

77. Avaunt] A contemptuous method of driving a person away. Compare Cotgrave, "Devant (interject.): used, as our Avaunt, in the driving away of a dog."

79. Your sword is bright, etc.] It is somewhat strange to see the Bastard acting as peacemaker. He is however commissioned to do so by John, to whom he owes everything. Still on the least genuine excuse he is ready for mischief (see line 95, etc. infra).

84. Nor tempt . . . defence] Nor run the risk of attacking my defence as a just man. "True" may have the double meaning here of Hubert's defence of himself in justice and of his good defence as a swordsman.

90. Do not prove me so] Do not make me one by causing me to murder you.

91. whose tongue . . . false] Hubert is calling Salisbury a liar in a manner befitting his humbler rank.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury: 95

If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime;
Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell. 100

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?
Second a villain and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:

I honour'd him, I loved him, and will weep 105
My date of life out for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villany is not without such rheum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence. 110
Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house;
For I am stifled with this smell of sin.

Big. Away toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

94, 95. gall] gaul Ff. 110. innocency] innocence Pope. 112. savours] F 1; savour Ff 2, 3, 4.

94. gall] wound. Compare Henry Elizabethan meaning. Compare Daniel, Civil Warres (1595), bk. i. stanza 15 (ed. Grosart):—

"So looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that hath galled him."

97. spleen] anger. Compare II. i. 448 supra, and V. vii. 50 infra.

110. remorse] pity, the general

"False John usurpes his Nephew
Arthur's right . . .
Murders the lawfull heire without remorse."

Pem. There tell the king he may inquire us out. 115
[Exeunt Lords.]

Bast. Here's a good world! Knew you of this fair work?
Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir.

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what; 120
Thou'rt damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black;
Thou art more deep damn'd than Prince Lucifer:
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul—

Bast. If thou didst but consent 125
To this most cruel act, do but despair;
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be a beam
To hang thee on; or wouldst thou drown thyself, 130
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.
I do suspect thee very grievously.

117-119. Beyond . . . Hubert] Pope's arrangement; Ff make two lines, first ending at mercy. 119. Art thou] Thou art F 4.

116. Here's a good world!] Compare iv. ii. 100 supra.

121. damn'd as black] The souls of the damned were in Mystery plays represented by actors who were blacked. Compare the queer bill quoted by Staunton for the Coventry plays:—

"Item, paid to three white souls, 5s.

Item, paid to three black souls, 5s.

Item, for making and mending of the black souls' hose, 6d.

Paid for blacking of the souls' faces, 6d."

126. do but despair] only despair is left for you.

132. ocean] A trisyllable.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought, 135
 Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
 Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
 Let hell want pains enough to torture me.
 I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.
 I am amazed, methinks, and lose my way 140
 Among the thorns and dangers of this world.
 How easy dost thou take all England up!
 From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
 The life, the right and truth of all this realm
 Is fled to heaven; and England now is left 145
 To tug and scramble and to part by the teeth
 The unowed interest of proud-swelling state.
 Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty
 Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest
 And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace: 150
 Now powers from home and discontents at home
 Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits,
 As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,
 The imminent decay of wrested pomp.

136, 137. Be guilty of the stealing, etc.] Compare III. iv. 19 and IV. ii. 246 supra.

137. embounded in] enclosed within.

140. amazed] stupefied, struck dumb with astonishment. Compare IV. ii. 137 supra.

146. scamble] scramble for, get by rough means. Compare Henry V. I. i. 4: "the scrambling and unquiet times." Cotgrave has "Griffe-graffe:" by hook or by crook, squimble squamble, scramblingly, catch that catch may." Rowe emended to "scramble."

147. unowed] unowned, for the ownership was being scrambled for. Compare "owe," IV. i. 123, etc. supra.

151. powers from home, etc.] foreign armies and internal rebels. Abstract for concrete.

152. waits] = awaits; transitive, the direct object being "decay."

154. wrested pomp] One is tempted to paraphrase this as "Usurpyd Power," one of the "characters" in Bale's Kynge Johan.

Now happy he whose cloak and cincture can 155
Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child
And follow me with speed: I'll to the king:
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt.

155. cincture] So Pope; center Ff. 158. in] at Rowe.

158. brief in hand] call for immediate attention or dispatch.

ACT V

SCENE I.—King John's palace.

Enter KING JOHN, PANDULPH, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. [Giving the crown.]

Pand. Take again
From this my hand, as holding of the pope
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French, 5
And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches 'fore we are inflamed.
Our discontented counties do revolt;
Our people quarrel with obedience,
Swearing allegiance and the love of soul 10

2. Take again] Lettsom conjectured "Take 't again," which Dyce printed in his second edition. An object is thus supplied to "take." Heath conjectures that "From this" should read "This from," which very ingeniously achieves the same end. By inserting a comma after "pope," "sovereign greatness and authority" may be made object to "take": the meaning is thus preserved and the grammatical construction saved. It is so printed in the 1821 Boswell-Malone. The Folios have no comma.

8. counties] Are we to interpret this as "nobles" (county = count, as in Romeo and Juliet), with Steevens and Delius, or as "shires," with Schmidt and Wright? I think the fact that there is no mention of the rebellion of the nobles (which at that time was the real danger, as Shakespeare knew), if this is supposed not to refer to them, decides the matter. John would never have omitted them from his list of troubles. This reason overweighs the negative evidence that "counties" is used by Shakespeare in other places only for Italian nobles.

10. love of soul] the sincerest love.

To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
 This inundation of mistempered humour
 Rests by you only to be qualified:
 Then pause not: for the present time's so sick,
 That present medicine must be minister'd, 15
 Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
 Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
 But since you are a gentle convertite,
 My tongue shall hush again this storm of war, 20
 And make fair weather in your blustering land.
 On this Ascension-day, remember well,
 Upon your oath of service to the pope,
 Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.
K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet 25
 Say that before Ascension-day at noon
 My crown I should give off? Even so I have:
 I did suppose it should be on constraint;
 But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds out 30
 But Dover Castle: London hath received,
 Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers:
 Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone

16. incurable] incurably F 4.

Mr. Moore-Smith quotes Measure for Measure, I. i. 18: "we have with special soul elected him," and Schmidt's dictum that the soul is represented as "the seat of real, not only professed, sentiments."

13. qualified] stemmed. Cotgrave has "Seder: to still, quiet, assuage, qualifie, mitigate." So Two Gentlemen of Verona, II. vii. 22: "But qualify the fire's extreme rage."

19. convertite] An old form of "convert." Compare Lucrece, 743: "He thence departs a heavy convertite."

To offer service to your enemy,
 And wild amazement hurries up and down 35
 The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
 After they heard young Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead and cast into the streets,
 An empty casket, where the jewel of life 40
 By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
 But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
 Be great in act, as you have been in thought; 45
 Let not the world see fear and sad distrust
 Govern the motion of a kingly eye:
 Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;
 Threaten the threatener, and outface the brow
 Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes, 50
 That borrow their behaviours from the great,
 Grow great by your example and put on
 The dauntless spirit of resolution.
 Away, and glisten like the god of war,
 When he intendeth to become the field: 55
 Show boldness and aspiring confidence.
 What, shall they seek the lion in his den,

36. your] F 1; omitted Ff 2, 3, 4.

40. where] whence Keightley conj..

49. outface] stare down. Compare
 & Henry VI. iv. x. 49:—

"Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes
 to mine,

See if thou canst outface me with thy looks";

also Heywood's Fair Maide of the West (ed. Pearson, ii. 287).—

"Should we contest I can Outface the proudest."

55. to become] to adorn. Compare
Henry V. iv. ii. 40:—

"Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
 Ill favouredly become the morning
 field."

And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
 O, let it not be said: forage, and run
 To meet displeasure farther from the doors, 60
 And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me,
 And I have made a happy peace with him;
 And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
 Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league! 65
 Shall we, upon the footing of our land,
 Send fair-play orders and make compromise,
 Insinuation, parley and base truce
 To arms invasive? shall a beardless boy,
 A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields, 70
 And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
 Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
 And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
 Perchance the cardinal cannot make your peace;

67. compromise] comprimise Ff.
 Ff 3, 4.

72. idly] idlely Ff 1, 2; idely

59. forage] range abroad, or, perhaps, seize supplies by force. Compare Edward III. iv. iii. 81: "And foragē their country as they have done ours." Shakespeare uses the word several times. Compare Henry V. 1. ii. 110:—

"Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp

Forage in blood."

Cotgrave has "Fourrager: . . . to forrage, . . . to ransack, ravage, boot hale it."

66-69. Shall we . . . invasive?] Shall we, with our feet upon our own soil, make overtures of peace to invading forces?

70. cocker'd . . . wanton] Very common in Elizabethan English. Cotgrave throws light on this expression—"To cocker: . . . mignarder"; "Mignarder: to lull, feddle, dandle, cherish, wantonnize, make much or make a wanton of." Compare More's Supplicacyon of Soulys quoted by Halliwell, sub voce "cocker." Sig. L. ii. "So kokered us nor made us so wanton."

71. flesh] to make an animal savage by foretaste of flesh. Compare Hakluyt (1577), ed. Macle hose, x. 498: "The tigers being fleshed on those dead carkeisse."

Or if he do, let it at least be said 75

They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away, then, with good courage! yet, I know,

Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Dauphin's camp at St. Edmundsbury.

Enter, in arms, LEWIS, SALISBURY, MELUN, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, and Soldiers.

Lew. My Lord Melun, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance:
Return the precedent to these lords again;
That, having our fair order written down,
Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes, 5
May know wherefore we took the sacrament
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal and an unurged faith 10
To your proceedings; yet believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time

3. precedent] Johnson; president Ff.

78, 79. Away, then, . . . prouder foe] We can hardly agree with Johnson that the Bastard is here showing the white feather by meaning "Yet I so well know the faintness of our party, that I think it may easily happen that they shall encounter enemies who have more spirit than themselves." Quite the contrary meaning is more in keeping with the Bastard's character and with the continual appeal to English patriotism in the play—"Even now I am confident that our party could beat a stronger foe."

Scene II.

1. this] the compact with the English lords. As an actual document it is evidently the same as the "precedent," the original draft which was to be returned to the Englishmen, while "it" in line 2 must have meant the copy that Philip ordered to be made.

Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
 And heal the inveterate canker of one wound
 By making many. O, it grieves my soul, 15
 That I must draw this metal from my side
 To be a widow-maker! O, and there
 Where honourable rescue and defence
 Cries out upon the name of Salisbury!
 But such is the infection of the time, 20
 That, for the health and physic of our right,
 We cannot deal but with the very hand
 Of stern injustice and confused wrong.
 And is't not pity, O my grieved friends,
 That we, the sons and children of this isle, 25
 Were born to see so sad an hour as this;
 Wherein we step after a stranger, march
 Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
 Her enemies' ranks,—I must withdraw and weep
 Upon the spot of this enforced cause,— 30
 To grace the gentry of a land remote,

16. metal] Rowe (ed. 2); mettle Ff. 27. stranger, march] Ff; stranger march Theobald; stranger's march Long MS.; stranger monarch Herr conj.

14. And heal] We may take the construction to be either "such a sore of time . . . (should) heal" or "(I am not glad to) heal."

17-19. O, and there . . . Salisbury] Two explanations of the meaning of these lines are offered. (i.) The English honourably engaged in fighting on their country's side would exclaim against Salisbury as a traitor. Compare 1 Henry IV. iv. iii. 81: "Cries out upon abuses." (ii.) The English would call upon Salisbury to rescue and defend them, where "cry out upon" = cry upon. Compare As You Like It, iv. iii. 150:

"And cried, in fainting, upon Rosalind." I incline to the second interpretation, because it has more connection with what goes before. "It grieves my soul to draw my sword in order to become a widow maker, and that among those whom I ought to rescue and protect."

27. stranger, march] Theobald and some others would omit the comma after "stranger," thus making it an adjective = foreign, and qualifying "march" = martial music.

30. spot] stain, dishonour. I must withdraw and weep over this dishonour into which I am forced.

And follow unacquainted colours here?
 What, here? O nation, that thou couldst remove!
 That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,
 Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself, 35
 And grapple thee unto a pagan shore;
 Where these two Christian armies might combine
 The blood of malice in a vein of league,
 And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lew. A noble temper dost thou show in this; 40
 And great affections wrestling in thy bosom
 Doth make an earthquake of nobility.
 O, what a noble combat hast thou fought
 Between compulsion and a brave respect!
 Let me wipe off this honourable dew, 45
 That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks:
 My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
 Being an ordinary inundation;
 But this effusion of such manly drops,
 This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul, 50
 Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed
 Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
 Figured quite o'er with burning meteors.

36. grapple] Pope; cripple Ff; griple Steevens conj.; couple Gould conj.
 43. thou] omitted in Ff I, 2, 3.

34. clippeth] embraceth, as often in Shakespeare.

39. to spend] This insertion of the mark of the infinitive is common in the case of the second of two infinitives following an auxiliary verb.

42. Doth] Attracted into the singular by the influence of "bosom." Hamner printed "Do," while Pope corrected "affections" in the previous line to "affection." But see note on II. i. 217 supra.

44. Between . . . respect] Between the distaste for this course into which you are compelled by force of circumstances, and a consideration of the woes of your country which make you bravely take this course. Hamner printed "compassion" for "compulsion," while Capell conjectured "compunction."

51. amazed] See IV. ii. 137 and IV. iii. 140 supra. Here the word more nearly means "astonished."

Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
 And with a great heart heave away this storm: 55
 Commend these waters to those baby eyes
 That never saw the giant world enraged;
 Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
 Full of warm blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
 Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep 60
 Into the purse of rich prosperity
 As Lewis himself: so, nobles, shall you all,
 That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.
 And even there, methinks, an angel spake:

Enter PANDULPH.

Look, where the holy legate comes apace, 65
 To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
 And on our actions set the name of right
 With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France!
 The next is this, King John hath reconciled
 Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in, 70

56. waters] F 1; warres F 2; warrs F 3; wars F 4. 59. Full of warm] Cambridge ed. (Heath conj.); Full warm of Ff.

64. And even . . . spake] The only satisfactory explanation of this line is that of the Cambridge Editors, who consider it a contemptuous aside of Lewis', with a play upon the word "angel," suggested by "purse" and "nobles." There is also a reference to the entrance of Pandulph. Even these explanations are not entirely satisfactory. The Folios place the stage-direction "Enter Pandulpho" after line 63. Hanmer read "speeds" for "spake"; Vaughan suggests "shapes," i.e. = shapes itself, appears; Herr "shakes." In the Two Angry Women of Abingdon the last part of scene vi. between Mistress Goursey and Coomes turns upon exactly the same pun upon the word "angel."

69. next] what comes next. See II Henry VI. III. i. 383, "And Henry put apart, the next for me." Did Shakespeare write "news," as he did in scores of similar situations?

That so stood out against the holy church,
 The great metropolis and see of Rome:
 Therefore thy threatening colours now wind up;
 And tame the savage spirit of wild war,
 That, like a lion foster'd up at hand, 75
 It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
 And be no further harmful than in show.

Lew. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back:
 I am too high-born to be propertied,
 To be a secondary at control, 80
 Or useful serving-man and instrument
 To any sovereign state throughout the world.
 Your breath first-kindled the dead coal of wars
 Between this chastised kingdom and myself,
 And brought in matter that should feed this fire; 85
 And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
 With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
 You taught me how to know the face of right,
 Acquainted me with interest to this land,
 Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart; 90
 And come ye now to tell me John hath made
 His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
 I, by the honour of my marriage-bed, *
 After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
 And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back 95
 Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?

72. see] F 4; See Ff 1, 2, 3.

78, 80. Your grace . . . control] Night, IV. ii. 99: "They have here Your grace must excuse me, but I propertied me."
will not draw back. I am too high-born to be made a tool of, etc. 89. Acquainted . . . land] Ac- quainted me with my claim upon the

79. propertied] Compare Twelfth land.

Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
 What men provided, what munition sent,
 To underprop this action? Is't not I
 That undergo this charge? who else but I, 100
 And such as to my claim are liable
 Sweat in this business and maintain this war?
 Have I not heard these islanders shout out
 "Vive le roi!" as I have bank'd their towns?
 Have I not here the best cards for the game, 105
 To win this easy match play'd for a crown?
 And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
 No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return 110
 Till my attempt so much be glorified
 As to my ample hope was promised
 Before I drew this gallant head of war,
 And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
 To outlook conquest and to win renown 115

108. No, no,] No, Pope.

101. such . . . liable] such as are willing to admit my claim. Compare II. i. 490, IV. ii. 226 supra.

104. "Vive le roi!"] Shakespeare gives this phrase four syllables, in the ultra-correct French manner—Vi-ve le roi.

104. bank'd] "formed on the analogy of 'coasted'" (Mr. Wright), and meaning "sailed along their banks." I know of no similar use in Elizabethan English; I am inclined to suspect the text, the more so because it does not seem likely that the French went to attack many towns by sailing up rivers, although the corresponding passage of the Trouble- some Raigne refers to sailing up the Thames. Vaughan takes "bank'd" to mean "set up banks around." Gould conjectured "pass'd." We might suggest "hail'd."

107. set] A term generally applied to the winning number of games in any kind of match. Here, of course, cards are referred to. Cotgrave has "Partie: . . . a match, or set, at game." Compare Titus Andronicus, V. i. 100: "As sure a card as ever won the set."

111. glorified] Compare IV. iii. 71 supra.

115. To outlook conquest] To defy conquest.

Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds.

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the BASTARD, attended.

Bast. According to the fair-play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak,
My holy lord of Milan, from the king: 120
I come to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties; 125
He flatly says he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breathed,
The youth says well. Now hear our English king;
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepared, and reason too he should: 130
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness and boyish troops,

124. wilful-opposite] Theobald; wilful opposite F 1; wilfull opposite Ff 2, 3; wilful, opposite F 4. 125. entreaties;] entreats. S. Walker conj.

119-121. speake, . . . king: I come] The Folios punctuate as follows: "speake: . . . Milane, . . . King I come to." The Cambridge editors insert a comma after come. Theobald reads "speake, . . . Milan, . . . King: I come,". Theobald's reading minus the comma after come, which appears unnecessary, is the one adopted above.

133. unhair'd] Theobald's emendation of "un-heard" of F 1, "unheard" of Ff 2-4. As Mr. Wright points out, this is supported by the spelling of "haire" as "heares" in the Faerie Queene, II. ix. 13. The meaning "unbearded" (Keightley conjectured "unbeard") is obvious when taken in connection with "boyish troops." For "unhair'd . . . and" the Collier MS. reads "unheard . . . of." Collier's second edition gives "unhair'd . . . of"; while Vaughan conjectures "unfear'd . . . in."

The king doth smile at; and is well prepared
 To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms, 135
 From out the circle of his territories.
 That hand which had the strength, even at your door,
 To cudgel you and make you take the hatch,
 To dive like buckets in concealed wells,
 To crouch in litter of your stable planks, 140
 To lie like pawns lock'd up in chests and trunks,
 To hug with swine, to seek sweet safety out
 In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake
 Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
 Thinking his voice an armed Englishman; 145
 Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
 That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
 No: know the gallant monarch is in arms
 And like an eagle o'er his aery towers,
 To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. 150

145. his] Rowe; this Ff. 148. No: know] No, no, Lettsom conj.
 149. towers] tower F 4. 150. souse] F 4; sowse Ff 1, 2, 3.

135. these pigmy arms] Rowe's reading. The Folios have this pigmy Armes, defended by Mr. Moore-Smith, who treats "pigmy arms" as singular. Vaughan suggests "this pigmy swarm."

138. [take the hatch] leap over the lower half of the door without waiting to open it. Compare King Lear, III. vi. 76: "Dogs leap the hatch and all are fled"; and see I. i. 171 supra.

141. pawns] things that are lying in pawn.

144. your nation's crow] The obvious reference is to the cock (gallus); there is a contemptuous side reference and play upon words in calling it a crow, and there may be, as Dr. Nicholson pointed out in Notes and Queries (Series iii. No. xi.

p. 251), a reference to the flight of ravens which was said to have struck terror into the French before the battle of Poitiers. There are many needless emendations of the passage.

149. And like an eagle, etc.] Soars high above his young ones to swoop down upon anything that comes near to annoy his nest. "Aery" really means nest, but Shakespeare uses it for the young brood. Compare Richard III. I. iii. 270: "Your aery buildeth in our aery's nest." "To tower" is to soar into a position for striking. Compare Lucrece, 506:—

"Which, like a falcon towering in the skies, Coucheth the fowl below."

150. souse] to swoop down upon; like "towering," another term from

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
 You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb
 Of your dear mother England, blush for shame;
 For your own ladies and pale-visaged maids
 Like Amazons come tripping after drums, 155
 Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
 Their needles to lances, and their gentle hearts
 To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace;
 We grant thou canst outscold us: fare thee well; 160
 We hold our time too precious to be spent
 With such a brabbler.

Pand. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lew. We will attend to neither.
 Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
 Plead for our interest and our being here. 165

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out;
 And so shall you, being beaten: do but start

156. change] chang'd Dyce (Lettsom conj. and Collier MS.).

falconry. Compare Ford's Fancies Chaste and Noble, iii. 2: "And (I) therefore mean to give the sowse whenever I find the game on wing."

152, 153. You bloody Neroes, etc.] Nothing was too awful to be believed of Nero. This special piece of atrocity is to be found in full in Higden's Polychronicon (Rolls Series, iv. 395); it is also referred to in the Troublesome Raigne, p. 34, line 389, and again by Shakespeare in Hamlet, iii. ii. 412.

154. maids] daughters.

157. Their needles] Pope omitted "Their"; Folios 1 and 2 read "need's," evidently indicating the pronunciation; Folios 3 and 4 read "needles." Steevens (1778) gives the old form, "neelds."

159. brave] thy braving of us, bravado. So Taming of the Shrew, iii. i. 15: "Sirrah, I will not bear these braves of thine."

162. brabbler] prater, babbler (Rowe read "babler"). So Troilus and Cressida, v. i. 99: "He will spend his mouth and promise, like Brabbler the hound." Cotgrave has "Breteleur: a brabler, chider, brawler or wrangler: a litigious or vain talker." Cotgrave's gloss shows clearly that Shakespeare had chosen the word,—a word, however, quite common in Elizabethan English.

An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
 And even at hand a drum is ready braced
 That shall reverberate all as loud as thine; 170
 Sound but another, and another shall
 As loud as thine rattle the welkin's ear
 And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand,
 Not trusting to this halting legate here,
 Whom he hath used rather for sport than need, 175
 Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
 A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
 To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up your drums, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. 180
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The field of battle.

Alarums. Enter KING JOHN and HUBERT.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
 Lies heavy on me; O, my heart is sick!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge, 5
 Desires your majesty to leave the field
 And send him word by me which way you go.

170. all as] Pope; all, as Ff.

169. ready braced] ready tightened up for playing. The leathern sliding loops which are used for tightening the membranes of military or side-drums are called "braces."

173. deep-mouth'd] deep-voiced.

Compare 1 Henry VI. II. iv. 12: "Between two dogs which hath the deeper mouth."

177. A bare-ribb'd death] Compare this image with that used by the Bastard in II. i. 352.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply
That was expected by the Dauphin here, 10
Are wrack'd three nights ago on Goodwin Sands.
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ay me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news. 15
Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

Enter SALISBURY, PEMBROKE, and BIGOT.

Sal. I did not think the king so stored with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French:

If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. 5

Pem. They say King John sore sick hath left the field.

14. Ay me] Aye me Ff; Ah me Pope.

Scene iv.

2, 3. French: . . . miscarry,] Rowe; French, . . . miscarry, Ff 3, 4;
French, . . . miscarry; Ff 1, 2.

11. Are] Capell printed Was and Lettsom supposes a lost line; but "supply" here is treated as plural, as again in v. v. 12 infra.

Scene iv.

5. In spite of spite] against all odds. Compare 3 Henry VI. ii. iii. 5: "And spite of spite needs must I rest awhile."

Enter MELUN, wounded.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold; 10

Unthread the rude eye of rebellion

And welcome home again discarded faith.

Seek out King John and fall before his feet;

For if the French be lords of this loud day,

He means to recompense the pains you take 15

By cutting off your heads: thus hath he sworn

And I with him, and many moe with me,

Upon the altar at Saint Edmundsbury;

Even on that altar where we swore to you

Dear amity and everlasting love. 20

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,

Retaining but a quantity of life,

7. revolts] the revolted nobles, as in v. ii. 151 supra.

11. Unthread . . . rebellion] Mr. Wright has conclusively proved in the Clarendon Press edition that the long series of emendations succeeding Theobald's rejection of the Folios' reading as too homely are quite unnecessary. Compare Richard II. v. v. 17:—

"It is as hard to come as for a camel

To thread the postern of a small needle's eye";

and Coriolanus, III. i. 124: "They would not thread the gates."

14, 15. For if the French, etc.] "He" comes in too abruptly, but its correctness is proved by the next lines. We must therefore suspect line 14. Mr. Wright suggests that "French" is singular, as in Henry V. iv. iv. 80: "The French might have a good prey of us if he knew it." This necessitates reading "lord" for "lords," and, unless we accept the conjecture made independently by Sidney Walker and Keightley that a line has been lost between 14 and 15, it seems the only way out of the difficulty.

17. moe] Anglo-Saxon má. This form often occurs in place of "more."

23. quantity] small portion. So Taming of the Shrew, iv. iii. 112: "Thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant."

Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire? 25
 What in the world should make me now deceive,
 Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
 Why should I then be false, since it is true
 That I must die here and live hence by truth?
 I say again, if Lewis do win the day, 30
 He is forsworn if e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east:
 But even this night, whose black contagious breath
 Already smokes about the burning crest
 Of the old, feeble and day-wearied sun, 35
 Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery
 Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
 If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
 Commend me to one Hubert with your king: 40
 The love of him, and this respect besides,
 For that my grandsire was an Englishman,
 Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
 In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
 From forth the noise and rumour of the field, 45

30. do] omitted by Pope. 31. forsworn] I omit the comma of the Folios.
 42. For . . . Englishman,] (For . . . Englishman) Ff.

24, 25. even as a form of wax, etc.] It seems to have been a common practice to place waxen images of enemies before a fire in the belief that as the wax melted the person represented wasted away. Hence the simile, although not directly referring to the above practice, would be more familiar to an Elizabethan audience than to us.

25. Resolveth] almost = dissolveth.

34. crest] The anonymous suggestion of "cresset" is most tempting.

37. rated] properly appreciated or recompensed.

37, 38. fine . . . fine] A play upon the meanings of "penalty" and "end." Compare Hamlet, v. i. 115: "Is this the fine of his finer?"

41. respect] consideration. Compare III. i. 318 supra.

Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
 In peace, and part this body and my soul
 With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee; and beshrew my soul
 But I do love the favour and the form 50
 Of this most fair occasion, by the which
 We will untread the steps of damned flight,
 And like a bated and retired flood,
 Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
 Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd, 55
 And calmly run on in obedience
 Even to our ocean, to our great King John.
 My arm shall give thee help to 'bear thee hence;
 For I do see the cruel pangs of death Right in thine eye. Away, my friends! New flight; 60
 And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.]

53. retired] retiring Hanmer.

49. beshrew] "a mild form of imprecation" (Dyce-Littledale). So Twelfth Night, iv. i. 62: "Beshrew his soul for me"; and see v. v. 14 infra.

54. rankness] Capell conjectures "bankless"; but "rankness" in the sense of immoderate growth or pressing beyond bounds is supported by many passages in the other plays, and this special use is found in Venus and Adonis, 71: "Rain added to a river that is rank." Compare also E.E. Psalter (1300): "He turned into blood the stremes ranke."

55. we have o'erlook'd] Compare Hamlet, iv. v. 99: "The ocean, overpeering of his list."

60. Right in thine eye] Vaughan, withdrawing his conjecture of "Brighten thine eye," would retain

59. pangs] fangs Heath.

the reading of the Folios, and so would Schmidt. Still it has perhaps a sufficiently suspicious look to justify the various emendations and suggestions—"Right in thine eyes," Pope; "Pight in thine eyes," Hanmer; "Pight in thine eye," Warburton; "Fight in thine eye," Capell; "Bright in thine eye," Collier, ed. 2 (Collier MS.); "Fright in thine eye," Anon. (ap. Collier conj.); "Riot in thine eye," Brae (conj.); "Writhing thine eye," Elze (conj. Athen. 1867); "Light on thine eye," Moberly (conj.).

60. New flight] Pope, in defiance of the final couplet, read "And fly!" and omitted the next line.

61. And happy newness . . . right] And happy be the new course which we take to establish the right we had forsaken.

SCENE V.—The French camp.Enter LEWIS and his train.

Lew. The sun of heaven methought was loath to set,
 But stay'd and made the western welkin blush,
 When English measure backward their own ground
 In faint retire. O, bravely came we off,
 When with a volley of our needless shot, 5
 After such bloody toil, we bid good-night;
 And wound our tottering colours clearly up,
 Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?Lew. Here: what news?Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords 10

3. When English measure] Pope read "th' English measur'd." But the sudden change of tense is not without warrant elsewhere. Mr. Wright quotes The Winter's Tale, v. ii. 83: "She lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embracing as if she would pin her to her heart." We might conceivably understand some such elliptical construction as "When the English (should so forget themselves as to) measure," etc.

4. retire] Compare II. i. 253, 326 supra.

5. a volley of our needless shot] = a needless volley of our shot. For this transference of adj. compare "bleeding ground," II. i. 304 supra.

7. tottering] The Folios have "tott'ring," Pope "tatter'd," Malone "tattering," Collier MS. "totter'd." Mr. Wright explains it as flying in tatters. It is quite certain that "tatter" was often spelt "totter" in Shakespeare's time. Fleay also points out that "totter" was used for swinging in the air—e.g. Spanish Tragedy, III. xii. 152: "behold a man hanging and tottering, and tottering as you know the wind will wave a man." "Tottering" here may mean waving in the breeze.

7. clearly] Capell conjectured "chearely," the Collier MS. "closely," an utterly un-Shakespearean use of the word. The Cambridge Editors suggest "cleanly," as "equivalent to 'neatly'" and "antithetical to 'tottering' or 'tattering.'" "Clean" or "cleanly" in the sense of "completely" is an English idiom traceable as far back as Alfred the Great—"Swæe clæne hio was opfeallenu," so completely had it fallen away (Preface to Alfred's version of the Cura Pastoralis).

By his persuasion are again fall'n off,
 And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,
 Are cast away and sunk on Goodwin Sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news! beshrew thy very heart!

I did not think to be so sad to-night 15

As this hath made me. Who was he that said

King John did fly an hour or two before

The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lew. Well; keep good quarter and good care to-night: 20

The day shall not be up so soon as I,

To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—An open place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead Abbey.

Enter the BASTARD and HUBERT, severally.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. A friend. What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

11. again] F 1; at length Ff 2, 3, 4.

12. supply] taken as plural. Compare v. iii. 9-11 supra. Capell read "supplies" for the same reason as he printed "was" in v. iii. 11.

14. shrewd] originally meant "cursed" = Mid. Eng. schrewed, p. part. of schreawen, to curse. The play upon the words "shrewd" and "beshrew" is now evident. For "beshrew" compare line 49 in the last scene; for the Elizabethan meaning, compare Cotgrave, "Mal: ill, bad, naughtie, lewd, . . . harmefull, shrewd."

20. keep good quarter] Keep careful watch, see that the sentries are properly posted. Scene iii. in Act iv. of Antony and Cleopatra explains this phrase, and in line 22, "Follow the noise so far as we have quarter," evidently means "Follow the noise to the limit of the post we have to guard."

Scene vi.

2-6. A friend . . . Hubert, I think] Few critics have been content with the arrangement of these lines, Hubert's expostulation (lines 4, 5) "why . . . mine?" being meaningless. Vaughan's suggestion is Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? why may not I demand
Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine? 5

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.
Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please,
Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think 10
I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou and eyeless night
Have done me 'shame: brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear. 15

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

3-6. Whither . . . thought] Arranged by Capell; six lines in Ff ending go? . . . thee? . . . affaires. . . mine? . . . thinke . . . thought:

perhaps the most ingenious and most plausible: "Hub. Of the part of England. Whither dost thou go? Bast. What is that to thee? Hub. What's that to thee.—Why may," etc. This different apportioning of the speeches and insertion of the repeated half line, at once straightens out the sense and corrects the metre. Watkiss Lloyd distributes the speeches as follows: "Bast. A friend. Hub. What art thou? Bast. Of the part of England. Whither dost thou go? Hub. What is that to thee? Bast. Why . . . mine? Hubert, I think." This suggestion would be convincing were it not for "Hubert, I think" being tacked on unnaturally to the Bastard's speech.

6. Thou . . . thought] You have guessed exactly right. So 2 Henry

V. III. i. 88. "King Richard might create a perfect guess."

11. one way] by one line of descent.

12. Unkind remembrance] i.e. really "unkind want of remembrance." Hubert reproaches his memory for failing him.

12. eyeless] The Folios read "endless" (with variations of spelling), for which Theobald reads "eyeless," a reading suggested by Warburton. Daniel conjectured "cand'less"—a hideous word. Is there a reminiscence on anyone's part (Shakespeare, copyist, or printer) of the "endless night" of Gaunt's speech in Richard II. I. iii. 22?

16. sans] Shakespeare was very fond of this French form of "without." It is also used by the anonymous writer of the Troublesome Raigne.

Hub. Why, here walk I in the black brow of night,
To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless and horrible. 20

Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news:
I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:
I left him almost speechless; and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil, that you might 25
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king 30
Yet speaks and peradventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back,
And brought Prince Henry in their company;
At whose request the king hath pardon'd them, 35
And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to bear above our power!

22. swoon] F 4; s wound Ff 1, 2, 3.

24-27. and broke out . . . known of this] I made my escape (from the Abbey) to tell you this evil news that you might prepare yourself better for the emergency than you could have done had you heard in a more leisurely manner.

28. who did taste to him] It was the duty of a "taster" to eat part of every dish set before the king with the object of detecting poison.

33. not?] Ff; not, Malone conj.

The monk had willingly sacrificed his life in performing this duty, thus making sure of the death of the king.

32. Who] Hanmer corrects to Whom. So Henry V. iv. vii. 154: "Who servest thou under?" This form for the accusative of the interrogative is not infrequent in lax English.

38. And tempt . . . power] Do not try us beyond our power.

I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,
 Passing these flats, are taken by the tide; 40
 These Lincoln Washes have devoured them;
 Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.
 Away before: conduct me to the king;
 I doubt he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The orchard at Swinstead Abbey.

Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood
 Is touch'd corruptibly, and his pure brain,
 Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house,
 Doth by the idle comments that it makes Foretell the ending of mortality. 5

Enter PEMBROKE.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak, and holds belief
 That, being brought into the open air,
 It would allay the burning quality
 Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here. 10
 Doth he still rage? [Exit Bigot.]

40. are] Compare this use of "power" as plural with that of "supply" in the same way in v. iii. 9-11 and v. v. 12 supra.

43. Away before] Lead the way on.

Scene VII.

2. corruptibly] Capell read "corruptedly"; Rann conjectured "corruptively." Mr. Wright points out that Shakespeare uses adjectives in -ible actively—e.g. Henry V. iii. iii.

50, where "defensible" in "For we no longer are defensible" means capable of making defence; therefore we must take the meaning of "corruptibly" as "so as to cause it to corrupt."

2. pure] We must understand "pure" as "naturally," "usually," or "otherwise," "clear." Grant White read "poor"; Vaughan suggests "hurt," but thinks "pure" quite possible; Herr conjectures "sore."
 11. rage] rave deliriously.

Pem.

He is more patient

Than when you left him; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes

In their continuance will not feel themselves.

Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, 15

Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now

Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds

With many legions of strange fantasies,

Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,

Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death should sing. 20

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,

Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,

And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings

His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born 25

To set a form upon that indigest

Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

16. his] F 1; hir Ff 2, 4; her F 3. 17. mind] Rowe (ed. 2); winde
F 1; wind Ff 2, 3, 4. 21. cygnet] Rowe (ed. 2); Symet Ff. 24. to F 1; omitted in Ff 2, 3, 4.

16. invisible] If we take this to refer to 'Death, the passage yields a good meaning—"Death, after preying upon the outward parts, leaves them without being seen and lays siege to the mind." There is a large number of unsatisfactory readings and conjectures. Fleay reads "leaves them, invisible; and his siege"; this throws up the necessary meaning by the punctuation and seems quite worth adopting.

20. Confound themselves] "non-plus" themselves. Compare "con- found their skill in covetousness," iv. ii. 29 supra.

21, 22. I am the cygnet . . . death] It was a popular belief that the swan "fluted a wild carol ere her death." So The Merchant of Venice, iii. ii. 44: "He makes a swan-like end, fading in music."

26. indigest] chaotic confusion. This appears to be a reminiscence of Ovid's "rudis indigestaque moles." So 3 Henry VI. v. vi. 51: "An indigested and deformed lump."

Enter Attendants, and BIGOT, carrying KING JOHN in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom, 30
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison'd,—ill fare—dead, forsook, cast off: 35
And none of you will bid the winter come
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw,
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosom, nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips 40
And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much,
I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait,
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O that there were some virtue in my tears,
That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot. 45
Within me is a hell; and there the poison

33, 34. Upon . . . up] one line in Ff. 35. ill fare] ill fair F 4.
43. ingrateful] ungrateful F 4. 45. in them] F 1; of them Ff 2, 3, 4.

35. ill fare] I fare ill, poisoned by ill fare. Mr. Worrall points out kindred "clenches" in Hamlet, III. ii. 97, 98, and Edward III. IV. vi. 53, 54.

37. maw] stomach, generally of animals. A.S. maga.

42. cold comfort] As Mr. Wright points out, this death-bed trifling with words has a parallel in the death scene of Gaunt in Richard II.

42. strait] niggardly, mean. We have a somewhat similar use in Timon of Athens, I. i. 96: "His means most short, his creditors most strait." The Folios have "straight," which was corrected by Pope.

Is as a fiend confined to tyrannise
On unreprieveable condemned blood.

Enter the BASTARD.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see your majesty! 50

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd,
And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, 55
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then all this thou seest is but a clod
And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward,
Where heaven He knows how we shall answer him; 60
For in a night the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the Washes all unwarily
Devoured by the unexpected flood. [The King dies.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear. 65
My liege! my lord! but now a king, now thus.

51. art] are F 4.

48. On . . . blood] On blood condemned beyond reprieve, i.e. John felt that his death was certain.

50. spleen of speed] See II. i. 448 supra.

51. to set mine eye] to close my eyes after death.

55. to stay it by] Keeping up the nautical metaphor, referring to the stay of a mast.

58. module] = model, pattern, mould, form. Cotgrave has

"Module: a model or module." Compare All's Well that Ends Well, IV. iii. 114: "Bring forth this counterfeit module." Hanmer printed "model."

58. confounded] worsted, destroyed. Compare IV. ii. 29 and V. vii. 20 supra.

60. heaven He knows] The "He" is a common pleonasm. For heaven = God = He. Compare III. i. 155 supra.

62. upon advantage] seeing a favourable opportunity.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.

What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind 70

To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, you stars that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? show now your mended faiths, 75

And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land.
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels. 80

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we:
The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take, 85
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

74. right] bright Pope. 84. our] fair Roderick conj.

75. Where be . . . mended faiths] I cannot agree with Mr. Wright's note upon "mended"—"John's fortune had broken faith with him"—implying that the Bastard was really addressing the stars. It seems to me quite evident that "Plantagenet" is talking to the nobles—"Stars that now move in your right spheres (which you had left awhile) where are your men? Show your returned allegiance by marching with me upon the foe at once." Pope also misunderstood the passage, or he could never have read "bright" for "right."

86. presently] immediately.

88. sinewed] The Folios have "sinew'd," which makes the line defective, leading to Rowe's reading of "sinewed" in the text, and the suggestion of the Collier MS., "sinew'd to our own."

- Sal.* Nay, it is in a manner done already ;
 For many carriages he hath dispatch'd 90
 To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
 To the disposing of the cardinal :
 With whom yourself, myself and other lords,
 If you think meet, this afternoon will post
 To consummate this business happily. 95
- Bast.* Let it be so : and you, my noble prince,
 With other princes that may best be spared,
 Shall wait upon your father's funeral.
- P. Hen.* At Worcester must his body be interr'd ;
 For so he will'd it.
- Bast.* Thither shall it then : 100
 And happily may your sweet self put on
 The lineal state and glory of the land !
 To whom, with all submission, on my knee
 I do bequeath my faithful services
 And true subjection everlastingly. 105
- Sal.* And the like tender of our love we make,
 To rest without a spot for evermore.
- P. Hen.* I have a kind soul that would give you thanks
 And knows not how to do it but with tears.

89. it is] Pope; 'tis Ff. 99. Worcester] Ff 3, 4; Worster Ff 1, 2.

97. princes] Sidney Walker suspects "princes," believing it to be a printer's error, owing to his eye catching the "prince" of the previous line. Mr. Wright points out that "princes" is used of the nobles in line 115, and that a preferable change would be "prince" into "king" in line 96.

99, 100. At Worcester . . . will'd it] According to Rolls of Wendover the dying king said "To God and St. Wulstan I commend my body and soul." St. Wulstan was Bishop of Worcester, 1062 to 1095-6 (Mr. Wright).

108. give you thanks] The Folios read "give thanks"; the reading in the text is Rowe's. The Cambridge Editors conjecture "fain give thanks"—a far finer reading.

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe, 110
 Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.
 This England never did, nor never shall,
 Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
 But when it first did help to wound itself.
 Now these her princes are come home again, 115
 Come the three corners of the world in arms,
 And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us rue,
 If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.

110. time but] Rowe; time: but Ff.

110. let us pay . . . woe] let us not give way to needless grief.

115. princes] "princes" evidently refers to the nobles returning to their allegiance. The Cambridge edition prints Mr. Lloyd's suggestion that the line is spurious— "A compliment to Steenie and Baby Charles, who came back from Madrid in the year that the first edition of King John was published, and thrust in by the editors, or perhaps by the actors, in place of a line of similar purport, but less applicable."

APPENDIX

King John, Act III. sc. i. l. 242: "Play fast and loose . . ." Various differing accounts of the "cheating game" known as "fast and loose" have been given. In the New English Dictionary we find Halliwell (1847) quoted: "a cheating game played with a stick and a belt or string so arranged that a spectator would think that he could make the latter fast by placing a stick through its intricate folds, whereas the operator could detach it at once."

Reginald Scot in his Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584) (Nicholson's Reprint, p. 276) describes two sleight-of-hand tricks which differ entirely from that described by Halliwell. They consist in making the looker-on believe that a knot in a handkerchief in the one case, and a bead on a string in the other, are "fast" when they are really "loose."

Sir John Hawkins (quoted in Phin's Shakespeare Cyclopædia, p. 112) speaks of the game as follows: "A leathern belt was made up into a number of intricate folds and placed edgewise upon a table. One of the folds was made to resemble the middle of the girdle, so that whoever could thrust a skewer into it would think he held it fast to the table; whereas when he had so done, the person with whom he plays may take hold of both ends, and draw it away." This is also quoted in the Dyce-Littledale Glossary sub voce, with the addition, "This trick is now known to the common people by the name of pricking at the belt or girdle, and perhaps was practised by gypsies in the time of Shakespeare."

This evidently is the kind of game alluded to in Drayton's Mooncalf:—

He like a gypsy oftentimes would go,
All kinds of gibberish he hath learned to know :
And with a stick, a short string, and a noose
Would show the people tricks at fast and loose.

This game is still played at country fairs and on race-courses, and the trick is worked as follows:—

A doubled belt is wound up upon itself with the middle, i.e. the doubled end, in the centre. It is then laid edgewise on a flat surface and the gull is asked to thrust a skewer or a knife through the central fold. This in the diagram is obviously A. If now the holder of the belt slips the end D round into the position D', and then pulls at C and D together, B becomes the central fold and the skewer or knife does not hold the belt "fast" as the gull expects. If the gull next time chooses B as the central fold, C and D are of course pulled off at once together. Hence the belt can be made "fast" or "loose" at the will of the player of the game.

This trick was evidently well known in Elizabethan times, for we find many mentions of it, e.g. Antony and Cleopatra, IV. x. 41, 42: "Like a right gipsy. hath, at fast and loose, Beguil'd me"; and the first part of Promos and Cassandra, ii. 5: "At fast and loose, my gyptian, I mean to have a cast."

